

Table of Contents

Formalia and Acknowledgements | 9

Introduction: Jacob Moleschott as Transnational Actor in European Cultural History | 13

Object and Research Question | 13

State of Research, Theory and Method, Structure | 20

Sources and Archives | 33

Jacob Moleschott and the Beginning of his European Career | 37

The Moleschott Family in Leiden and 's-Hertogenbosch | 40

The Gymnasium at Cleves and the Study of Classical Culture and Idealist Philosophy | 43

Studying Medicine at Heidelberg | 46

Back to the Netherlands: Medical Practice and Research in the Lab
in Utrecht, 1845-1847 | 55

Back to Heidelberg: Popularization and Revolution, 1847-1856 | 60

Georg Forster: Moleschott's Representation of a Politically Engaged Scientist | 94

Moleschott's Anthropologie

as Synthesis of All Disciplines: A Life's Project | 100

Conclusion | 110

Moleschott's Popularization of Physiology and Dietetics in Germany | 113

Women as Further Popularizers of Moleschott's Work | 122

Nature as Organic Whole: "The Unity of Life" | 123

Dietetics | 133

Conclusion | 137

Zürich: Meeting Point of European Liberal Elites | 141

Moleschott at the University of Zürich, 1856-1861 | 147

Licht und Leben | 157

Conclusion | 161

Experimental Physiology in Turin

and Popularization in the Kingdom of Italy, 1861-1878 | 163

Moleschott's Arrival to his "Adoptive Fatherland" | 163

Cultural and Professional Life in Turin | 175

The Italian Citizenship: Moleschott's "Grand Naturalization" | 181

A Public Personality on the Way to Full Political Engagement | 185

Moleschott's Popularization of the Natural Sciences

in Turin and its Transnational Reception | 189

Conclusion | 220

Moleschott in Rome (1878-1893): Scholar and Senator between Internal and Foreign Politics | 223

Moleschott and Women's Rights | 229

Moleschott's Engagement Against Anti-Semitism | 240

Moleschott's Academic Activity and Popularization

of Scientific and Political Ideas at the University of Rome | 245

Moleschott's Conception of Science in the Debates on the Reform of Higher Education in Italy (1886-1887) | 259

Shaping the Body of the Nation: Moleschott and the Debate on Physical Education in Nineteenth-Century Italy (1878) | 287

Taxation and Nutrition: The Debate on the Abolition of the Grist Tax

(Macinato) between Nutritional Theory,

Political Economy and Social Policy (1880) | 303

Conclusion: Politics, Natural Science, and the Function of the Classics | 323

Cultural Politics: The Civilizing Mission of Science | 327

The Planned Congrès International

pour le Progrès des Sciences Sociales (1866) | 329

The Monument to Giordano Bruno and its Political Meaning (1889) | 337

Moleschott's Role of Mediator

in the International Sanitary Conference (1885) | 351

Moleschott on Criminal Anthropology and Penal Law | 357

The Debate About the Conference on Criminal Anthropology (Rome 1885):

Moleschott versus Tommasi-Crudeli | 359

Moleschott's Speeches at the International Congress

on Criminal Anthropology, Rome 1885 | 368

Italian Penal Law between

Criminal Anthropology and Natural Philosophy | 378

Conclusion: Moleschott's Speeches on Penal Law

as a Form of Popularization and a Plea for Secularization | 383

Moleschott and Translation | 391

Criminal Anthropology and Moleschott's Collaboration with Cesare Lombroso | 391

The Process of Translation and the Circulation of Knowledge | 408

Moleschott as Mediating Figure between Nations and Cultures | 414

Conclusion: Translation and Mediation | 427

Celebrating Moleschott, Remembering Moleschott | 429

Celebrating Moleschott: The Feste Giubilari in 1892 | 429

Remembering Moleschott: Moleschott's Commemorations
at the Senate and at the University | 434

Conclusion: Jacob Moleschott, A Transnational Actor between Science and Politics | 439

Bibliography | 449

Archives (with Abbreviations) | 449

Primary Literature by Jacob Moleschott | 453

Primary Literature by Authors Other than Jacob Moleschott | 467

Reference Works (with Abbreviations) | 471

Secondary Literature | 472

