This section is yet another endeavor that I cannot possibly succeed at, but that still urgently needs to be committed to. It is the task of finding words on the beings and spaces that have authored this work just as much as I did. These words I feel are ever lacking and ever loving but here goes my attempt.

I give thanks to the German Foundation of the Economy for financially supporting both my master's studies and this PhD research. Without your generous funding and without the kind guidance of Nicole Thielicke this project would have certainly never been possible to realize.

I acknowledge Leuphana University for providing this research with its institutional home, for giving me the opportunity to graduate as a student in the doctoral track, and for being the place where I got to meet Christoph Brunner and Roberto Nigro.

I thank Concordia University for introducing me to Montreal and Erin Manning to me.

I acknowledge some phallogocentric men I have met in my early years of study. You are quite violent creatures but at least you helped me develop that which would later make me outgrow you and never go back: intellectual confidence.

I thank Roberto Nigro for his kind heart and incredible insight as well as for PhD supervision that made me feel nothing but encouraged and nurtured in all my endeavors.

I am sending gratitude towards Christoph Brunner, who is the first supervisor of this work. Thank you for gifting me the notion of the continuum and for your supervision.

Also, please give my thanks to Levi for running through the snow with me.

I sincerely thank Alexis Shotwell for her kind invitation to Carleton University in November 2024, for her open-mindedness and open-heartedness and for accompanying me as my third supervisor. I truly appreciate your support.

Thank you to Erin Manning for your work and for our coffee date in November 2024. Thank you for writing The Perfect Mango and thank you for existing.

Erin Manning and Christoph Brunner, thank you for bringing me to Montreal!

Thank you both, Erin Manning and Brian Massumi, for forming 3ecologies and for helping me meet my first Canadian forest and my first Canadian lake.

Thank you, Noah Gounoue, for introducing me to Feminist Philosophy on that first shared evening that we will both never forget because it entered our very lives and hearts. We shared an experience of knowing that theory is survival and love and connection. Whenever I am lost I look to this night, and I look to you and all the love I hold for you.

Thank you, Miriam Thiel, for showing me what a political friendship looks like, feels like, what it teaches me and how it holds me. Thank you for your belief in me, for helping me develop and sustain this vision and version of myself as a theorist.

Thank you, Paloma Nana, for a friendship so deep and beautiful that I could never have imagined it even in my most beautiful dreams. You have co-authored every word of this thesis and I am the luckiest woman because I get to be your friend. Thank you for being so insistent on making me dream. And thank you for your music and your writing because this world is gifted so much warmth and potentiality through you and your work.

Thank you, Kira Herff, for your incredible research, for your activism and your wisdom, for your love, and for your inexhaustible belief in me and my work! You sustain me and I could not be more grateful.

Thank you Chiara Stefanoni, for reading with me and for existing in the university despite this never being an easy endeavor of existence.

Thank you, Mie Natus, for being my sister and for knowing everything.

Thank you, Franci Mangraviti, for your brave and outstanding work on feminist mathematics, thank you for sending me this one email in 2023, and thank you for helping me create Spectrums of Sexuality and my self-understanding as an autistic woman. You are very needed in this very strange world, and I am utterly glad to know you.

Thank you, Nicole Kauer, for ever so many hugs and talks, for helping me survive my stalker, for texting flame emojis as a feminist metaphor, and for being the journalist that you are.

Stephanie Deig, I am so very deeply impressed each time I get to talk to you, and I cannot believe my luck in calling you my friend, colleague, and the incredible copyeditor of this work. You helped me bring this thesis to life and to be excited, stay excited, stay troubled and nuanced and loving with both myself and all others.

Thank you to my mother Dorothee Galm for being all that you are and for teaching me that being who you are in your work means needing to be who you are in all areas of your life.

I thank my grandmother Gertrud Galm, who taught me to think-with way before I encountered this notion academically. Thank you for reading with me and thank you for writing with me.

And I very deeply thank you, Leo Galm, for your hugs, for your financial support, for your relation to mathematics and philosophy, and for how lovingly you passed those interests to me. Thank you for believing in me so very deeply that I can feel it every day!

I need to thank a number of spaces and locations that have been equally important in co-authoring this work. Thank you to my writing tree in Lüneburg; you helped me write the very first introduction to this work and you helped me be incredibly excited and playful. Thank you to the forest close to my parents' house: you are where I started writing. Thank you to the windmill Johanna in Hamburg because you made me feel at home and I love writing next to you. Thank you to my lake in Hamburg because together with Paloma and Hook, you have kept me alive, particularly during that one summer when it was hard to stay alive. Thank you to the '3ecologies – woods.'

Thank you to the apartments and homes I have lived in and through: to two very different apartments in Lüneburg, to that one place in Hamburg that was lacking a floor but that was close to the windmill and the lake. And thank you to my Airbnb apartment in Montreal and to my actual home in Montreal.

Thank you to Montreal for being the place where I am suddenly breathing in a way that I had not even thought possible. And thank you to everyone and everything who let me be and breathe here.

Thank you, Hooki, my more-than-human friend for being my partner and the co-author of this work. You teach me countless things every day.
