

Marvin Heine
Resonant Fabrics

Urban Studies

Throughout the past few years, I encountered many wonderful people who helped this book come into being and instilled in me ways of thinking and sensing for which I am forever grateful: Thank you to Stephen Barber, without whom this book would never have been published. Thank you to Ignacio Fariás, whose insights profoundly shape the ways I perceive the world. Thank you to Monika Kurath, for opening up horizons and to Christoph Reinprecht for his trust. Thank you to Işıl, who is the background keynote to every page of this book. Thank you, Salome, your friendship means everything to me. And thank you, Meldis, the best pen-friend in the world. Thank you to Romina, Hannah-Lou, Anna, Hanni, Jörg, and Martha, whose voices are music to my ears, and whose eyes calm me when I shake. Thank you to all those sounds and silences and tiny and beautiful wonders of this world.

Marvin Heine is an environmental sociologist and doctoral candidate at the Humboldt University Berlin. He is deeply interested in the senses, their phenomenology, mediations, and politics. His research focuses on the influence of sense perception on processes of socialization, as well as the storied and sensorially mediated transformation of human-environment systems.
