

Contents

List of illustrations	9
Acknowledgements	13
Prologue: Voices and borders	17
Introduction	27
The European border and migration regime	27
Why 'refugee'?	31
The 1951 Convention and the making of the modern refugee	34
Visual representations and the construction of refugees as figures of crisis	41
Situating art on refugeedom in a Danish context	44
Refugees in art: Literature review	51
Methodological considerations	54
An implicated subject: On positionality	63
Chapter overview	66
1. Making worlds, telling stories, claiming voice: theoretical considerations	71
Worldmaking and worlding	71
Narrative and voice	74
Voice and cultural citizenship	81
A postmigrant framework	85
'Placing' refugees in postmigrant societies	93
Worldmaking denizens and the postmigrant condition of togetherness-in-difference	97
2. Refugees, worldmaking and transversal politics through art	101
The conflicted welcoming of refugees to postmigrant societies	101
Denmark's asylum policies around 2015	107
Solidarity work and worldmaking at Trampoline House and CAMP	108
The democracy of those who are present	115
CAMP – curating art on migration politics	118

Art institutions as providers of infrastructure	119
Anchoring solidarity work in the local	122
Curating as a politically mobilizing practice and poetics of relation	127
CAMP's off-site events and collaboration with larger institutions	134
Postmigrant public spaces	136
3. Building collective infrastructures and strategies of care at documenta fifteen	141
Hostipitality towards 'strangers' at documenta fifteen	141
Infrastructures of selection, redistribution and participation	145
Differentiated participation in documenta fifteen	149
Trampoline House at documenta fifteen	153
Creative collaborative strategies of care	161
Transversal politics as prefigurative politics: Concluding remarks	168
4. A postmigrant civic ethics from the perspective of the refugee	173
Dilemmas of representing refugees	173
Politics, ethics and aesthetics	178
Denmark's immigration and asylum policies	179
100% FREMMED? – an overview of the project	183
A postmigrant society	185
Individual and type	188
A Human Exhibition?	191
The domestic culture of public discourse	194
Hannah Arendt's ethics of alterity	198
Transforming the image of Denmark	201
A postmigrant transversal politics through art: Concluding remarks	205
5. Bringing refugee memories and heritage into public view	209
Where does the past go?	209
Greetings from a land that no longer exists	214
Diasporic memories of genocidal violence	217
Camp structures for a life between permanence and temporariness	223
Refugeedom and the limbo of waitthood	228
Waitthood, trauma and prosthetic memory	234
6. Killing time in Gaza and speculative Palestinian futures	237
Palestine seen through contrasting artistic lenses	240
Radical waitthood and responsible empathy	242
Imagining possible futures for Palestine	251

Conclusion: Refugees and representation261

Bibliography..... 269

