

Contents

Acknowledgments | 7

Introduction | 9

- 0.1 Researching anonymity in performance: Towards a performance ethnography | 9
- 0.2 The enigmatic void: From anonymity to anonymity performances in electronic dance and pop music | 21
- 0.3 On critical practice: Methodological considerations with Fever Ray | 33

1 Laboratory Case I: Moodymann and the study of pop music persona construction | 59

- 1.1 Unveiling the curtain: Inquiries into pop music persona construction | 59
- 1.2 Insistent naming: Self-attributed vs. imposed anonymity, and the performative self in celebrity culture | 99

Conclusion: Moodymann's inquiries into pop music persona construction | 109

2 Performance in music (studies) | 111

- 2.1 Music as practice and performance: The performance turn in pop music and EDM studies | 112
- 2.2 The performative in pop music discourse and tactical critical practices | 118
- 2.3 The performative in scholarly acts: Performance ethnography as performance research and the tactics of scholarly representation | 132

Conclusion: From the performance turn to performance ethnography in music studies | 138

- 2.4 Revised structure of the study | 139

Excursion: Persona – encyclopaedia entry with one genuine (and one false) etymology | 140

3 Laboratory Case II: Ursula Bogner and performance research | 151

- 3.1 From spectacle to transformation: A brief history of the term (and practice of) fake | 153
- 3.2 From fake to collaborative imagination: The ‘laboratory case’ of Ursula Bogner | 166
- 3.3 Critical practice in academic research and collaborative imaginary ethnography | 191

Conclusion: Towards ontological reflexivity
in ethnographic research | 196

Conclusion: Towards a reconceptualisation of ethnographic practice as collaborative imagination | 199

Appendix | 207