

Contents

Acknowledgements 7

Acronyms 9

1. Debating the Nation..... 11

1.1 Research Context..... 15

1.2 Some Theoretical Considerations 19

1.3 Structure..... 42

2 State and Society in the Colonial Era..... 47

2.1 Asian Agency in the Colonial State 50

2.2 African Nationalism – the Evolution of a “Common Sense” 55

2.3 Gender in Colonial Tanganyika 63

2.4 TANU – Seizing the State..... 70

2.5 The Social World and the Public Sphere after Independence 74

2.6 Conclusion: Challenges to Persistent Colonial Structures..... 80

3 1964-1966 Search for Unity & Independence 83

3.1 Racial Relations 84

3.2 Decolonizing Education? 99

3.3 Decolonizing Gender Roles? 110

3.4 Conclusion: Independence in Crisis 118

4 1967-1970: African Socialism or African Tradition?..... 121

4.1 (Non-) Racialism in Schools 123

4.2 Reforms on the Hill – the Pretext 145

4.3 Gender – the Articulation of Women’s Critique in the Public Sphere 164

4.4 Conclusion: Debating New Concepts and Struggling with Old Structures 179

5	1971-1974: Achieving Liberation from Colonial World Views?	183
5.1	The Comeback of "Race"?	185
5.2	The University – A Contested Space	201
5.3	Gender – A Struggle Against Colonial Laws and Values	212
5.4	Conclusion: "Race" Demoted and Gender Transformed	228
6	1975-1979: Finding New Arenas in which to Debate	233
6.1	Gender Roles in the Newspaper	238
6.2	New Arenas for Debates on Gender Roles	241
6.3	Conclusion: Uncertainty and Agency	245
7	Conclusion	247
7.1	A Contested National Narrative	248
7.2	Interrelation Between the Public Sphere and Social World	250
7.3	Formative Obscurities	253
7.4	Limitations and Prospects	256
8	Bibliography	259
8.1	Secondary Literature	259
8.2	Sources	268