This PhD would not have been possible without the support of a number of people. First, I would like to thank my supervisor Joanna Redden for her enthusiasm about my research and her unwavering support – from the initial project idea through the chaotic pandemic times and even after changing institutions. I would also like to thank my supervisor Arne Hintz for accepting the challenge of joining this project halfway through, and for his invaluable feedback and guidance. I am further grateful to my second supervisor Francesca Sobande for her enriching supervisory support and her encouragement. Likewise, thanks to the whole Data Justice Lab for their important research and a stimulating research environment.

I would also like to thank the project collaborator, the NGO Privacy International, for a fruitful collaboration with a great outcome. In particular, thank you, Gus Hosein, for your time, your insights, your enthusiasm for my research, and for all of your work in raising awareness and educating about data technologies.

I am further grateful to all participants of my study. Thank you for sharing your time and very valuable insights, thoughts and experiences on critically educating about datafication. I have learned so much.

I also want to thank my colleagues at the Helmut-Schmidt-University Hamburg for countless fruitful discussions and their collegiality. Special thanks to Sigrid Hartong for her ongoing support and understanding, and the invaluable insights from many inspiring conversations in the last years.

Last, but not least, I want to express my deepest gratitude to those closest to me. I would like thank my partner Ashley for her immeasurable support every step of the way throughout these PhD, pandemic and remote working years. I would also like to thank my family for always having my back and for their endless belief in me; and my friends for cheering me up, encouraging, or – if needed – distracting me. Finally, thanks to my proofreaders, specifically to Angela for going above and beyond in being an extremely supportive friend and proofreader.

This PhD and the open access publication of the findings were supported by the Economic and Social Research Council Wales as part of the “Collaborative Doctoral Training Partnership” pathway [grant number ES/P00069X/1].
