This book, the outcome of reflections on Chinese reality TV, affective structure, class division, as well as my own identity, would not be possible without the help of many people. I would like to first express my sincere appreciation to Professor Margreth Lünenborg, my PhD supervisor at Freie Universität Berlin. Her enthusiastic, incisive, and meticulous guidance and support were indispensable for me to find my research direction, advance step by step, and finally complete the writing of my doctoral dissertation, which is the predecessor of this book. I am truly grateful.

I would also like to thank Professor Ji Li for encouraging me to pursue a doctoral degree in Germany and for always caring about my academic progress and life. I am also grateful to Professor Jens Eder for his careful reading and insightful feedback. I am thankful to my colleagues in the Institute for Media and Communication Studies at Freie Universität Berlin, in particular Débora Medeiros, Claudia Töpfer and Ana Makhashvili. I learned a lot from them in our colloquium.

I am greatly thankful to the China Scholarship Council for granting me a four-year scholarship. My research would not have been possible without this funding.

Finally, my thanks also go to those families, friends, and colleagues who have directly or indirectly helped me complete this book.

I dedicate this book to my husband Sheng Yao. Thank you for always encouraging and supporting me to pursue my dreams.
