

Thanks

This study is my doctoral thesis and was financed by the Swiss National Science Foundation (SNF). I am glad for having had this opportunity to work and do research in my special field of interest. First of all, my thanks go to my doctoral committee, consisting of Prof. Dr. Albert A. Stahel (Institute for Strategic Studies, Wädenswil), Prof. Dr. Kurt Imhof (University of Zurich) and Prof. Dr. Ueli Mäder (University of Basel). In particular, Albert Stahel strengthened my critical mind concerning world politics and the strategic decision-making of nation states. His faith in my scientific endeavours gave me the self-confidence to keep going with my work.

My simulation model profited from the long-time simulation experience and advice of Armando Geller (co-founder of Scensei, and affiliated with the School of Conflict Analysis and Resolution at George Mason University in Washington) and Lukas Schmid (head of the Institute for Innovation, Design und Engineering at the University of Applied Sciences of St. Gallen). Their critique enabled me to improve the model and made me realise that a lot would still have to be done to bring it up to date.

Many people enriched this study by giving me formal or informal interviews in Central Asia. I cannot name all of them because some could face difficulties with their restrictive governments. I am very thankful for their hospitality and openness to discuss with me their religious and political worldviews.

My Kyrgyz friends in Switzerland enabled me to come into contact with many people in the field and were always open to discuss the topic of my research with me. Without them this study would not have become as vivid, well-researched and detailed as it has. They helped me with their knowledge of local languages, by sharing their own research and life experience.

riences with me, and by contacting their relatives and friends in the region. Aijamal Huonker was also employed by SNF in the project to do research in local online newspapers as well as on official websites, and also helped me to transcribe some interviews. Baktygul Karimova was especially helpful by advising me on how to do research in the field and by introducing me to many people in the field.

Another special thanks I owe Lisa Harand. She enabled me to undertake a research trip to Central Asia by looking after my daughter during my interviews there. The wonderful pictures she took enrich this study with insights that words cannot capture. After a common vernissage we co-published a “by-product” of my dissertation – the photobook “Re-Islamisierung in Zentralasien”. Our collaboration showed me that scientific research is even more valuable if it is illustrated in a way accessible to the broader public.

My former English teacher, Lee Mackenzie, reviewed my texts carefully and I am indebted to him not only for grammar corrections but also for many comments on style. Except from myself, no-one read my texts as carefully as he did, and I think no-one will do so in the future. Apart from his professional help, I am very happy that he was on my side during the whole process of the development of this study.

To take a broad view, without my employment at econcept AG, this study would have been much more difficult to accomplish. By giving me very good and flexible working conditions, Barbara Haering enabled me to work, complete my doctorate and also give birth and raise two wonderful girls all at the same time.

Last but not least, I want to thank my friends and, most of all, my husband and family members who have been patient enough to enable me to fulfil this work which has become a matter that is close to my heart.
