

Contributors

Saowanee T. Alexander is assistant professor of Sociolinguistics at Ubon Ratchathani University, Thailand.

Carmen Birkle is chair of North American Literary and Cultural Studies at Philipps-Universität Marburg, Germany.

Anna Corrigan is teaching associate in Spanish and Latin American Studies at University of Cambridge, U.K., and fellow of the Global Sentimentality Project at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Thomas Demmelhuber is chair of Middle East Politics and Society and PI of the DFG-Research Training Group “The Sentimental in Literature, Culture, and Politics” at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Christian Krug is senior lecturer for English studies and PI of the DFG-Research Training Group “The Sentimental in Literature, Culture, and Politics” at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Sarah Marak is lecturer for American Studies at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Marc Andre Matten is professor of Contemporary History of China and PI of the DFG-Research Training Group “The Sentimental in Literature, Culture, and Politics” at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Duncan McCargo is President’s Chair in Global Affairs at Nanyang Technological University, Singapore.

Julian Müller is sociologist and visiting professor at the School of Public Affairs at Leuphana Universität Lüneburg, Germany.

Heike Paul is chair of American Studies and spokesperson of the DFG-Research Training Group “The Sentimental in Literature, Culture, and Politics” at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Sarah Pritz is sociologist and postdoctoral researcher in the DFG-Research Training Group “The Sentimental in Literature, Culture, and Politics” at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Elaine Roth is professor of Film Studies at Indiana University South Bend, U.S., and Mercator Fellow of the DFG-Research Training Group “The Sentimental in Literature, Culture, and Politics” at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Charleena Schweda is doctoral researcher in English Studies in the DFG-Research Training Group “The Sentimental in Literature, Culture, and Politics” at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Vincent Steinbach is doctoral researcher in Sociology in the DFG-Research Training Group “The Sentimental in Literature, Culture, and Politics” at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Antonia Thies is doctoral researcher in Political Science in the DFG-Research Training Group “The Sentimental in Literature, Culture, and Politics” at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

Jan-Henrik Witthaus is professor of Romance Studies at Kassel Universität, Germany.

Harald Zapf is senior lecturer for American Studies at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany.

