

Contents

Acknowledgements	11
-------------------------------	----

Introduction

Architectural drawing as investigating Device	13
0.1 The homogeneous addressee of modernism: perspective representation in the work of Ludwig Mies van der Rohe and Le Corbusier	15
0.2 Postwar engaged users as activators of social change	21
0.3 Architecture's addressees as decomposers and the primacy of the observer over the user	22
0.4 The return to real space through the fragmented user in the post-autonomy era: Rem Koolhaas and Bernard Tschumi's programmatic diagrams	24
0.5 From "property value" to "functional value" to "de-construction value" to "new perception and experience value"	26
Notes	27

Chapter 1: Le Corbusier's act of drawing

The process of crystallization of design ideas	31
1.1 Le Corbusier's conception of patient search: Drawing as pushing inside	35
1.2 The notion of transmissibility in Le Corbusier's thought	39
1.3 Around the capacity of architectural forms to provoke sensations	41
1.4 Le Corbusier vis-à-vis the postwar Italian Neo-Humanistic discourse: The debates around proportions	42
1.5 Human scale and universal needs: Towards a universal user or the Modulor	44
1.6 Towards a conclusion: Architecture beyond the machine	48
Notes	50

Chapter 2: Le Corbusier's space beyond words

From assemblages of components to succession of events	59
2.1 The notion of assemblage in Le Corbusier's thought: Architecture as precise relationships	61
2.2 The "maison-outil" as clear syntax: Towards synchronism or the game of indisputable emotions	63
2.3 Le Corbusier's relationship with De Stijl: The interest in precision	64
2.4 Le Corbusier's double attraction to the straight line or the right angle and the spiral: Linking geometry to contemporary spirit	67
2.5 The notion of circulation in Le Corbusier's work: Eyes to feast on the walls or perspectives beyond walls	70
2.6 Le Corbusier's conception of the metropolis: Tabula rasa urban theory?	73
2.7 The "Open hand" as an expression of freedom?	76
2.8 Towards a conclusion: From assemblages of components to succession of events	79
Notes	84

Chapter 3: Ludwig Mies van der Rohe's interior perspective views

Around the specificities of his visual dispositifs	95
3.1 The viewer vis-à-vis the interior perspective views of Mies van der Rohe	98
3.2 The distinction between tactile and optical perception in Mies van der Rohe's work	103
3.3 Mies van der Rohe's Brick Country House	104
3.4 Mies van der Rohe vis-à-vis the assemblage of textual counters	106
3.5 Between Mies van der Rohe and Hans Richter: Around the use of charcoal tonalities	107
3.6 Comparing Le Corbusier and Mies van der Rohe's dispositifs	110
3.7 Towards a conclusion: Mies van der Rohe's representations as symbolic montage	115
Notes	117

Chapter 4: Ludwig Mies van der Rohe's Baukunst as Zeitwille

The interest in impersonality and the autonomous individual	123
4.1 Contextualizing Mies van der Rohe's conception of Zeitwille	124
4.2 The ambiguity of Mies van der Rohe's simultaneous interest in impersonality and the autonomous individual	126
4.3 Baukunst as Zeitwille and the dualism between object and culture	128

4.4	Mies van der Rohe's representations: Non-resolved emptiness as "negativeness" towards Großstadt	131
4.5	Mies's Baukunst as an antidote to the chaos of metropolis.....	135
4.6	Representational living and the capacity of space to stimulate the intellect	137
4.7	Teaching as an organic unfolding of spiritual and cultural relationships	138
	Notes	146

Chapter 5: The Team Ten and the humanization of architecture

	Postwar engaged users as activators of change	155
5.1	The Doorn manifesto as a fruit of generational conflict.....	159
5.2	The CIAM X and distrust in the concept of the "new".....	163
5.3	After the Otterlo meeting: The "Post Box for the Development of the Habitat" as an agent of dynamic informality.....	166
5.4	Alison and Peter Smithson's collages as reinventing established reality	168
5.5	Aldo van Eyck's ethnographic concerns and the search for "the truly human" ..	173
	Notes	177

Chapter 6: Aldo Rossi's visual strategies and the prioritization of the observer

	Urban facts as objects of affection	181
6.1	Aldo Rossi's transatlantic exchanges and the proliferation of exhibitions on architectural drawings	185
6.2	Aldo Rossi's representations as transforming architectural and urban artefacts into objects of affection	192
6.3	Aldo Rossi's understanding of the tension between individual and collective memory.....	197
6.4	Aldo Rossi's interest in the vitality of the dynamic of the expansion of the city	198
6.5	The import of the discourse around typology in the American scene.....	199
6.6	Aldo Rossi's attitude toward typology and the urban facts of the American city	202
	Notes	203

Chapter 7: Constantinos Doxiadis and Adriano Olivetti's role in reshaping the relationship between politics and urban planning

7.1	Constantinos A. Doxiadis and Adriano Olivetti and the formation of national identity in post-war Greece and Italy.....	213
7.2	Adriano Olivetti's political agenda and the UNRRA-CASAS program	214

7.3	The Marshall Plan and the transatlantic exchanges in architecture, urban planning and the arts	217
7.4	Constantinos A. Doxiadis's political agenda and The Plan for the Survival of the Greek Nation	219
7.5	Towards a conclusion or juxtaposing centralized and decentralized political apparatuses	225
	Notes	227

Chapter 8: Giancarlo De Carlo's participatory design methods

	Growth and flexibility in architectural organisms	231
8.1	From representation of designers to representation of users: Revisiting Giancarlo De Carlo's conception of participation	234
8.2	The Nuovo Villaggio Matteotti in Terni and the concept of participation	236
8.3	Giancarlo De Carlo and the humanization of architecture: The real transformation of the world	244
8.4	Giancarlo De Carlo and architectural pedagogy	248
8.5	Giancarlo De Carlo as exhibition curator	249
8.6	Around the presence of human figures in the photographs and drawings of Giancarlo De Carlo's buildings	250
8.7	Towards a conclusion or problematizing participation: From "participation" to "co-production" to "negotiated planning" to "crossbenching"	257
	Notes	258

Chapter 9: Denise Scott Brown and the socio-anthropological meaning as new objectivity

	Challenging functionalism through social patterns	265
9.1	Denise Scott Brown at the 1956 CIAM Summer School and the significance of planning	267
9.2	Advocacy planning movement and the critiques of urban renewal	270
9.3	The impact of Herbert Gans's socio-anthropological perspective on Denise Scott Brown's approach	271
9.4	Learning from Levittown Studio: Towards a socio-anthropological perspective	273
9.5	South Street in Philadelphia and a careful regard for people and existing architecture	284
9.6	The patterns of mapped data as signs of life	285

9.7 Towards a conclusion: Looking sociology from an architectural viewpoint	293
Notes	299

Chapter 10: Bernard Tschumi's politics of space

Architecture as instrument of socio-cultural change	307
10.1 Bernard Tschumi and May '68: Social concerns and teaching strategies	310
10.2 Diploma Unit 10 and the integration of space into pedagogy: Notation and events	314
10.3 The Insurgent Space Catalogue	317
10.4 Questioning architecture's function as an instrument of socio-cultural change	318
10.5 Bernard Tschumi and the politics of space	320
10.6 A Space: A Thousand Words	321
10.7 The Manhattan Transcripts and the disjunction of the Metropolis	328
10.8 Conclusion: Around the relevance of Bernard Tschumi's thought for current debates	336
Notes	343

