

About the authors

Mihail Arandarenko is professor of Labour Economics, Belgrade University and chairman of the board, Foundation for the Advancement of Economics.

Predrag Bejaković took his doctorate at the Economics Faculty in Zagreb, and now works in the Institute of Public Finance, Zagreb.

Erisa Çela holds a BA in British and American Studies from the University of Tirana in Albania and a Master Degree in Democracy and Human Rights in South-eastern Europe, jointly by University of Bologna and University of Sarajevo. Since 2008, she has worked with the Albanian Institute for Democracy and Mediation.

Svetlana Cenić, graduated from the Economics University in Sarajevo, took post-graduate courses at Cambridge University, and PhD studies in Switzerland. She worked for several multinational companies, was adviser to the Vice-president and then President of the Republika Srpska; for a year she performed the duty of a minister of finance.

Cornel Ciurea graduated in International Economic Relations at the Academy of Economic Science in Chisinau and Political Science in Bucharest. He works as expert and Project Coordinator for the Institute for Development and Social Initiatives “Viitorul” a leading think tank in Moldova.

Gabriela Cretu was a Member of the Romanian Parliament (2004-2007) and a Member of the European Parliament (2007-2009). At present she is Permanent Representative to the European Institution of the Romanian Senate.

Jeton Mehmeti works as a policy analyst at GAP Institute in Prishtina. He received his MA degree from the Department of Public Policy, Central European University, Budapest.

Neda Milevska-Kostova, holds a Master of Public Policy and Management (MCPMP) from the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs (GSPIA), University of Pittsburgh, USA, and Master of Science from the University of Tokyo, Japan. Currently she is Executive Director at the CRPRC Studiorum.

Jadranka Kaludjerović holds a PhD in Economics from the University of Montenegro. She works as programme director at the Institute for Strategic Studies and Prognoses in Montenegro.

About the authors

Biljana Kotevska, LL.B, MA, holds a Master of Arts in Democracy and Human Rights in South-East Europe, from the University of Sarajevo and University of Bologna. She works as a Researcher at CRPRC Studiorum.

Dušan Pavlović is a political economist. He received his PhD from the Central European University in Budapest in 2002. He is currently teaching at the faculty of political science, University of Belgrade.

Krastyo Petkov graduated from the Economic University in Sofia; he is full professor in economic sociology and European comparative social policy and teaches at the University “Kliment Ohridski” as well as at the University of National and World Economy (UNWE) in Sofia.

Atanas Vladikov occupies the position of Senior Assistant Professor at the Faculty of Economic and Social Sciences at the University of Plovdiv, Bulgaria.