First and foremost, I would like to thank the interviewees of this study—the young adults of Polish heritage in Montreal, Toronto, and Berlin—for sharing their amazing stories with me and for making my stay in each of these places unforgettable. The study would have not been possible without them.

I would like to express my gratitude to the International Research Training Group (IRTG): “Diversity—Mediating Difference in Transcultural Spaces” for making their support available in a number of ways: providing an inspiring scholarly environment in Trier, Saarbrücken, and in Montreal as well as giving me scientific and financial freedom.

I am deeply grateful to my supervisors, Prof. Dr. Martin Endreß (University of Trier) and Prof. Dr. Barbara Thériault (Université de Montréal). I would like to express my sincere gratitude to Prof. Endreß for his open mind, his patience, and his most valuable comments, which were of enormous help to me. His colloquia offered a welcoming platform to present my drafts and to learn from the experiences of others. I would like to thank all the participants for their feedback, especially Dr. Gabriel Stefan Nicolae, Dr. Benjamin Rampp, and Andreas Zerver. I would not have missed the stimulating discussions for the world. I owe my deepest appreciation and thanks to Prof. Thériault for her enriching and thought-provoking comments on my work, as well as her continuous support and motivation. Her guidance helped me throughout the time of research and writing of this thesis. She also welcomed me many times at the Université de Montréal and provided me with sought-after office space at the Department of Sociology during my stays abroad. I always very much appreciated her hospitality. I could not have imagined having better supervisors.

In addition to my supervisors, I am greatly indebted to Prof. Dr. Ursula Lehmkuhl (University of Trier) and Prof. Dr. Ludger Pries (Ruhr-University Bochum). I have profoundly benefited from Prof. Lehmkuhl’s immense knowledge and support, which had a significant influence on this project. I especially appreciated her guidance and illuminating feedback when working with me on a meanwhile published book chapter. I would also like to express my special thanks to Prof. Pries, whose door at his Chair of Sociology/ Organization, Migration, Participation has been always open to me. Both his constructive comments on my research and his warm encouragement in times of hardship have been priceless. My gratitude is extended to Prof. Dr. Luin Goldring (York University, Toronto) and Prof. Dr. Paul Morris (Université de Saint Boniface, Winnipeg) for encouraging and eye-opening discussions.

I share the credit of my work with my colleagues and fellow Ph.D.-students: Sophie Schram, Rahab Njeri, Dave Poitras, Christoph Laugs and all the others, whom I thank for lively discussions, for our intensive workshops in Otzenhausen, and for all the fun we have had in the last four years in both Germany and Canada. I am particularly grateful for the assistance given by Dr. Lutz Schowalter, Dr. Gisela Minn, and Stefan Dixius at the University of Trier. I would also like to thank my editor, Dr. Alexia Moyer, who has done excellent work.

It is a pleasure to thank Séverine, Markus, and Dorota for their friendship and for the refreshing distractions from the academic world. My greatest gratitude goes to my family: my brother and my parents for their unconditional encouragement and for always being there, no matter what. This thesis would have remained a dream had it not been for my parents' support: that is why I dedicate it to them. Finally, I owe a big thank you to Florian, who has not only been an amazing help as a critical reader of the manuscript, but also a wonderful companion along the way. Thank you for your love and for making me so happy.
