This book will tell the reader a story about the power of encounters that cross one's path and shape an unpredictable destiny. But entanglements and intercrossings have left the strongest mark not only on the on-stage history of Ibsen in Romania that is the subject of this book, but also my backstage journey through this research. I am grateful for all the encounters that have made me part of this incredibly fascinating histoire croisée.

First and foremost, I wish to thank Daniel Bonanati and Linda Dümpelmann at transcript Verlag for offering me the opportunity to publish my PhD dissertation as a book. As members of the committee that evaluated my doctoral thesis on behalf of the Faculty of Humanities at the University of Oslo, Ellen Karoline Gjervan, Oana Dubălaru and Giuliano D'amico included valuable suggestions, comments and criticism in their report, as well as during the public defense of the thesis in June 2020. It was a privilege to have them as examiners and to consider their feedback in the revision of this dissertation for publication.

I am grateful to my supervisors Prof. Frode Helland and Prof. Sanda Tomescu Baciu for their warm guidance, precise remarks and wise advice on the rough path of a road that had hardly been crossed before. This research entailed extensive travelling between Norway and Romania; the support of my supervisors has been essential for its development, which has been subject to constant geographical and theoretical re-locations.

I also wish to give special thanks to Prof. Julie Holledge who was not only the external reader of my mid-way evaluation, but also the most careful, enthusiast, inspiring and engaged mentor and companion with whom I shared the last year of my PhD journey. She was also the very first person to whom I confided the thought of studying the history of Ibsen in Romania in 2016, and who also dared to cross temporally and spatially the fluid boundaries of this research together with me.

I must express my gratitude to the Centre for Ibsen Studies for the PhD scholarship that gave me the opportunity to conduct this research. More than an institution dedicated to one of the most performed playwrights worldwide, the Centre for Ibsen Studies has been my home since the very first time I came to Norway in 2015 as a Master student, with a scholarship granted by SIU, which gave me the opportunity to write a Master Thesis in Ibsen studies. This was how I discovered the IbsenStage Database, which has been an essential tool in my PhD Thesis. The filling in of gaps in Romanian Ibsen performance was the first step of this research, and since 2015, I have constantly worked on supplying the database with information on this geographical area. I am thankful to Prof. Frode Helland, Stine Brenna Taugbøl, Hedda Solberg Rui, Nina Marie Evensen and Maria Fåskerti for entrusting me with the responsibility for the Romanian IbsenStage dataset. Former and present colleagues and PhD candidates at the Centre for Ibsen Studies have constantly encouraged and supported me with my research. I am particularly indebted to Jens-Morten Hanssen for the SQL guidance, which allowed me to take my investigation of the IbsenStage database one-step further. I also owe special thanks to Ragnhild Schea for her English language mentoring and for being a patient and careful audience at rehearsals for my conference presentations.

In addition, a considerable part of my research was conducted in Romania. I had the joy of returning to the Department for Scandinavian Literatures and Languages at the Faculty of Letters at the Babeș-Bolyai University of Cluj-Napoca, which was the first place to stimulate and feed my interest in Ibsen while I was a BA-student learning Norwegian. On several occasions, Prof. Sanda Tomescu Baciu gave me the opportunity to share my research with students studying Ibsen as part of their BA in Norwegian Language and Literature. Prof. Crina Leon also warmly hosted me at the Faculty of Letters at University Alexandru Ioan Cuza of Iași for a lecture about the local Ibsen history of the city. Special thanks also go to my teachers and PhD colleagues in Cluj-Napoca who helped me develop my skills as a researcher. One of them is Cristina Popescu, who became one of my dearest friends and a sharp reader of the earliest drafts of this thesis. Her confidence in my career as an Ibsen scholar proved contagious.

Beside my colleagues who specialised in Scandinavian studies, I had the chance to polish my research in discussions with Prof. Mihaela Ursa and Prof. Miruna Runcan. Finally, Erzsébet Zakariás and Zoltan Csép kindly welcomed me in the archive of the Hungarian State Theatre of Cluj and introduced me to the fascinating Transylvanian Ibsen history.

My travels across Romania entailed the contact with numerous archivists, librarians and professors whose contribution was essential for my fieldwork. The massive bureaucracy that characterises the Romanian research institutions and the too few digitised materials affected my research practice. Almost all the material that I have consulted was gathered through hands-on research. This process is not only more time-consuming than a research based on digital resources, but it also made me aware of how sensitive and even threatened historical material is by the very passing of time. The pieces of paper I investigated and which attest to Ibsen performances in Romania may no longer exist in a few decades. One of the aims of this book is to symbolically save this material and make it visible to the world outside the archives.

Participation at conferences gave me the chance to tell the story of Ibsen in Romania to diverse audiences. I thank the organisers of the SASS Conference (Los Angeles 2018 and Madison 2019), IFTR Conference (Shanghai, 2019), TaPRA Conference (Exeter, 2019), ARSBN Conference (Târgoviște 2018, Constanța 2019), and not in the least the Ibsen Conference (Skien 2018) for generously offering me an opportunity to share new knowledge about a mostly unheard history.

I wish to thank Dragoș-George Lunțaru for making his GIS expertise part of this thesis and thus helping me to give a new shape to the IbsenStage cartographic material.

I also owe him the greatest acknowledgment for the moral support and steadfast companionship through the good and the bad times, as well as for his everlasting confidence that I can fulfil this project. I am also indebted to my parents for their advice and for letting me find my own path.

To conclude, I agree with Barbu Fundoianu, who considered that trebuie să-l iubești mult pe Ibsen și să știi iubi [...] ca să ai curajul să renunți la un omagiu mediocru, în schimbul unei critici cu respect făcută (one must be capable of a great love towards Ibsen and must be capable of love in general [...] in order to give up a mediocre homage for a respectfully expressed criticism; my translation) (1920: 1).

I hope that this book fulfils his expectation.
