In zwangloser Reihenfolge erhalten an dieser Stelle Institutionen, die für die Entwicklungspolitik und Entwicklungsforschung von Bedeutung sind, Gelegenheit zur Selbstdarstellung.

A grant from the Ford Foundation in 1965 established the African Law Center at Columbia University. Its objective is to promote the study of African Law through research and writing. It has fostered the study of African customary laws, the integration of court systems, the fusion of the indigenous laws and the imported laws, and other key developments in African law.

The Center's most important work is the publication of the AFRICAN LAW DIGEST four times a year. This is a compilation, in digest form, of the significant legislative, administrative regulations and notices of the states and territories of Africa, together with notes and other items of interest. The DIGEST, together with its index, provides a convenient means of access to a large and critical body of African legal material.

As an additional tool for African legal research the Center publishes AFRICAN LAW STUDIES. This publication provides research aids and information on current developments which are not covered adequately by law reviews and other periodicals. It includes such items as bibliographical essays, analyses of comparable legislation and annual or biannual surveys of legal developments in particular countries or in particular fields. A section of book reviews and notes on current publications is included.

Members of the legal profession utilize the facilities of the Center and the extensive African Law Library at Columbia. American scholars and visiting foreign scholars engaging in research in African Law make steady use of the staff of the Center for bibliographical and other services.
