

Editorial

As cultural boundaries blur and virtual and physical spaces merge, interculturality and digitalization mould our everyday world. We believe these entangled concepts should be viewed together. Our interdisciplinary book series is dedicated to the idea of a scholarly Intercultural Communication, informed by the perspectives of critical Digital and Internet Studies: Studies in Digital Interculturality. In this series we wish to publish thematically relevant monographs, anthologies, dissertations, and edited volumes of the highest quality.

The series is edited by Luisa Conti, Fergal Lenehan, Roman Lietz and Milene Oliveira.

Milene Oliveira is a lecturer in Applied Linguistics at Newcastle University, UK. She earned her PhD in Applied Linguistics from the University of Potsdam in 2018, where she also led the BMBF-funded project Digital Communities and Online Intercultural Competence (2020–2024). Her research explores digital intercultural communication, interactional sociolinguistics, English as a lingua franca (ELF), and business communication.

Luisa Conti (PhD) is a researcher based at Friedrich-Schiller-Universität Jena and P.I. of several national and international projects on digital interculturality. Her interdisciplinary research aims to understand the impact of digitalisation on individual and social well-being, while exploring its potential to drive a sustainable societal transformation.
