

Contents

Preface	9
Introduction	13
1. The concept of democracy	19
1.1 Democracy as a contested concept	19
1.2 Models of democracy	21
1.3 Foundational and surplus dimensions of the concept of democracy	23
2. The competitive market and the state	29
2.1 Hobbes: anarchy, leviathan and the competitive market	30
2.2 Justifying the market: social order, protection from arbitrary powers and unlimited wealth	30
2.3 Self-regulation, limited politics and the open-access market	34
2.4 Economist kings, authoritarian liberalism and structural constraints	38
3. Garrett Hardin's tragedy of the unregulated commons	45
3.1 The tragedy: maximization strategies and the double C-double P game	45
3.2 Social institutions against tragedy: privatism or socialism	48
4. Overcoming the tragedy with the Ostroms	51
4.1 Collective action and "grim" social dilemmas	52
4.2 The tragedy of monocentric orders	54
4.3 The tragedy of privatization and the market	57
4.4 Overcoming tragedy through collective action	70
4.5 Self-governing commons with the aid of eight design principles	75
4.6 Institutional diversity and polycentricity	81
4.7 Interim conclusion	85

5. An ecological understanding of the commons	89
5.1 Nature, language and social relations	90
5.2 Concepts of nature and social reality	93
5.3 Autopoiesis and the interdependent co-creation of reality	100
5.4 Ecosystems, abundance and natural commons	106
5.5 Empathy, cooperation and a common(s) reality	115
5.6 Ecological freedom, democracy and care	119
5.7 The civic tradition of ecological democracy and commoning	130
6. Towards a commons theory of property	143
6.1 The normative language of goods	144
6.2 Common needs, common resources and common property	148
6.3 Reinterpreting John Locke's theory of property from a commons perspective	155
6.4 Predistribution: commons in a property-owning democracy	180
6.5. Consumption goods: individual or common property?	194
6.6 Interim conclusion.....	205
7. The role of the state in a commons-creating society	207
7.1 Preliminary reflections on the state-commons relationship	207
7.1. Varieties of the state and the role of the commons	210
7.2 Public goods versus state-supported commons: housing, health care and education	216
7.4 Creating commons in a non-ideal world – in and against the state	239
8. Commons and the market	251
8.1 The market in commons literature	252
8.2 Enclosing commons and opening markets	256
8.3 The market as a commons	260
8.4 Responses to possible critiques of the market commons	274
9. Conclusion	279
Literature	299

“We stand at the gates of an important epoch, a time of ferment, when spirit moves forward in a leap, transcends its previous shape and takes on a new one. All the mass of previous representations, concepts, and bonds linking our world together are dissolving and collapsing like a dream picture. A new phase of the spirit is preparing itself. Philosophy especially has to welcome its appearance and acknowledge it, while others, who oppose it impotently, cling to the past.”

G. W. F. Hegel, in a lecture on September 18, 1806, quoted in Francis Fukuyama's End of History (1992)

“There is enormous inertia – a tyranny of the status quo – in private and especially governmental arrangements. Only a crisis – actual or perceived – produces real change. When that crisis occurs, the actions that are taken depend on the ideas that are lying around. That, I believe, is our basic function: to develop alternatives to existing policies, to keep them alive and available until the politically impossible becomes politically inevitable.”

Milton Friedman, Preface to Capitalism and Freedom (1982)

