This book would not have seen the light without the support and encouragement of three PhD students to whom I am intensely grateful. Martina Flores Mendeville carried me through the whole process of (re)writing the book. With her eagle eye, patience, and conscientiousness, she provided the editing and necessary revisions of the texts included in this book. My sincere thanks go also to Ricarda Franzen and Pablo Alvez Artinprocess, for their confidence and encouragement, motivation, and inspiration to make this book. This would not have happened without the regular meetings with our PhD reading group under the umbrella of ASCA, the Amsterdam School for Cultural Analysis. I owe my thanks to all members of the reading group for all the stimulating and critical discussions. ASCA has always been generous in supporting research, be it individual or collective, many thanks for that. And then there are those who did an amazing work as translators: Annika Hilger, more recently, and Götz Dapp, in earlier years, helped me to make my texts—originally written in German—available to an English-speaking academic community. I admire their fluency in both languages.

I will never forget my colleagues of Theatre Studies at the UvA, their dedication to the program and the readiness to fight for it: Sruti Bala, Cock Dieleman, (again) Ricarda Franzen, Rosa van Kollem, Kasia Lech, Sérgio Pereira Andrade, Lisa Skwirblies, meLê Yamomo, Rob van der Zalm, and Veronika Zangl. Ta ta muchly to Christopher Balme, without whom I probably never would have started an academic life.

Last but not least, I am owing a debt of gratitude to my good spirit and mind, and inexhaustible source of inspiration who has been accompanying me for more than a quarter of a century, Alexander Jakob.
