

Contents

| | |
|--|----|
| Abbreviations | 11 |
| Foreword | 13 |
| Acknowledgements | 15 |
| Chapter 1 | |
| Introduction: Toward embedding “failed” migratory adventures in southern Mali | 19 |
| Hazards, survival, and loss in adventure – the emblem of returning empty-handed | 21 |
| The specificities of (post-)deportation in Mali | 23 |
| Toward the topic and question: “failed” migratory adventures | |
| under post-deportation conditions in southern Mali | 25 |
| Literary reminiscences – the “failed” hero? | 25 |
| The migratory adventure | 27 |
| Deportations and the supposed “failure” of the migratory adventure | 29 |
| Central questions, aims, and contentions | 32 |
| Everybody is a refoulé | 33 |
| Embedding research situations post-deportation in Mali | 34 |
| Deportability and deportation as a process over time and space | 36 |
| Structure and aims of the book | 38 |
| Chapter 2 | |
| Contextualizing and historicizing deportations and situations post-deportation in Mali .. | 41 |
| Mali, migrations, mobilities, and immobility | 41 |
| Histories of migration, mobility, and immobility | 43 |
| Histories of African deportations | 49 |
| The case of Libya and progressive EU externalization | 51 |
| Reactions to deportations and returns in Mali | 55 |
| Recent deportation regimes and reactions | 59 |
| The case of Kita, reversed migrations and deteriorated developments | 66 |
| Kita research sites | 68 |

| | |
|--|----|
| Bamako – hub of migration, return, and transit | 70 |
| Concluding remarks | 72 |

Chapter 3

| | |
|--|-----------|
| Methodology in context | 75 |
| In the field: associations, activists, and deportations “everywhere” | 76 |
| Shifting positionalities in action research among associations and activists | 79 |
| Accessing and researching with former deportees | 81 |
| Extending the site to the village. Researching post deportation in the rural hinterland | 85 |
| Collaborating with a co-researcher – considerations of give and take | 89 |
| Methods, sampling and data gathering in polyphony | 91 |
| Analyzing along the general lines of grounded theory | 97 |
| How to study conditions post deportation? Concluding reflections | 100 |

Chapter 4

| | |
|---|-----|
| “The adventure is not easy.” – Narrating forms of suffering in deportation experiences 103 | |
| Experiencing North African deportation regimes | 106 |
| Within the externalized transit corridor | 108 |
| “Having something in the head.” – Stress, violence, and pain after deportations | 108 |
| Shock, alienation, and the luck of survival | 111 |
| “Legal violence” in European deportation regimes | 115 |
| Accounts of trauma and self-organized groups as intermediaries | 117 |
| Spatial and temporal disorders over time | 119 |
| Symbolism of the state | 121 |
| Concluding remarks | 124 |

Chapter 5

| | |
|---|------------|
| “It’s [not] all about money.” – About returning with empty hands and relational (re)negotiations in the adventurer’s drama of return | 127 |
| Salif, Karim and returning to the village: “ tounga man ja ” | 130 |
| Yakouba’s return with some money | 132 |
| Searching for money, “success,” and the meaning of contributing | 134 |
| Social and familial renegotiations and positioning post deportation | 139 |
| On shame and “ fa den sago ” | 139 |
| Ambivalent (intimate) relations post deportation | 142 |
| Revisiting the social order – talking or not talking | 145 |
| Gossiping and mothers’ roles in the adventurer’s success | 146 |
| The power of silence | 150 |

| | |
|---|------------|
| The ambivalent role of money and debt under post-deportation conditions | 152 |
| Revisiting the meaning of money, potential debts and reciprocities | 153 |
| Concluding remarks | 155 |
| Chapter 6 | |
| “On se débrouille.” – (Re)negotiating masculinities after deportation through everyday suffering, hard work, and (im)mobilities | 159 |
| Studying masculinities and “failed” migration | 161 |
| “I am obliged to stay where I am.” – Restricted mobilities, suffering, and working in Bamako | 162 |
| “As a man, you have to be strong where you are!” – Suffering and courage in the rural hinterland | 167 |
| Active waiting | 170 |
| Intersections of courage, suffering, and adventure | 171 |
| On “adventure-hood” and adulthood as a man | 174 |
| Agricultural hardships and “back to the soil” ? | 176 |
| The question of marriage after deportation | 179 |
| Generational discrepancies and generations of deportees | 181 |
| Concluding remarks: assembling deportee masculinities ? | 182 |
| Chapter 7 | |
| “Si j’ai la chance.” – Final sense- and future-making of “failed” adventures post deportation | 187 |
| Approaches to la chance – Adama and the past chance of the adventure | 188 |
| On chances, luck, and destiny | 190 |
| The adventurer’s “failures,” risks, and chances | 192 |
| Religious and ritualistic inscriptions of “failed” adventures | 195 |
| Maraboutage and calling on higher spirits for la chance in adventures | 197 |
| Approaching the future – (un)certainties and contingency under post-deportation conditions | 201 |
| Future plans and aspirations – between planning and vague disorientation | 203 |
| Revisiting the imaginary of migratory success | 210 |
| Concluding remarks | 216 |
| Chapter 8 | |
| Conclusion | 219 |
| Facing conditions post deportation in southern Mali – a short summary | 219 |
| Supposed “failed” migratory adventures and sociological ambivalence | 223 |
| Back to the political and what remains to be done | 226 |

Glossary 231

Bibliography 233

*To all those in Mali, Germany, and elsewhere
who supported me and offered me their time, their intimacy, and their wisdom.*

