For this book I was allowed into the intimate lives of five women. They let me be – or allowed me to continue being – part of their lives for the five years of the PhD process, and I am very grateful to them for their contributions and thought-provoking discussions. Without their consent to participate and share their stories, this thesis would not exist. What figures in this research is really only a small part of their lives, which have just begun. Their reflections about the African diaspora will continue to evolve during the course of their lives, especially as their children get older and develop their own expectations in relation to their ancestral origins. I hope that I will be able to continue being a part of their lives too. For the purpose of anonymity, I am only able to refer to you using your pseudonyms, but I still want to say thank you to Maya B., Aminata Camara, Lamine Camara, Lafia T., Oxana Chi and Layla Zami.

I wish to express my deep gratitude to my supervisor Anne-Christine Trémon. Not only did she agree to supervise me in a difficult time, but she took that task very seriously. Her intellectual engagement with my research contributed in a vital way to the making of the thesis, while her questions, suggestions and comments throughout the whole research process shaped this work in its becoming what it is. Without her guidance I do not want to imagine how this book would have turned out. I would also like to thank my co-supervisor David Picard for getting the ball rolling in the first place. He made this thesis possible by giving me the opportunity to come to the little Swiss mountain town of Sion and become a PhD assistant, and he introduced me to the exciting world of academia and the anthropology of travel and tourism. Both of you encouraged and supported me to actually go through with this research, and I am very grateful for that support.

I would further like to express my thanks to the jury members H el ene Neveu Kringsbach, Damani Partridge and to the PhD comit e member Naomi Leite. Your engagement with my research and your questions, suggestions and comments opened up my research to new paths, theories and methods and helped me to make my writing more precise and concrete.

Thank you to my colleagues from the Cultures and Natures of Tourism Working Group and to all my fellow IGD colleagues for always making the campus in Sion and Lausanne pleasant places to hang out and come to work. Coffees, lunches and apéros with you made it so much fun to work at Unil, and I am grateful for being able to make so many friends from all over the world. Although I was already aware of it, the Covid-19 crisis made me realise all the more what a particularly friendly working environment I had, because I have truly missed my colleagues this last year. A special thank you also to the Personnel Administratif et Technique Christelle Monnet, Marcia Curchod, Carole Oppliger and Joëlle Richard for helping me get over all the hurdles of university administration and bureaucracy. Thank you also to the Laboratoire d'Anthropologie Culturelle et Sociale – LACS at Unil. It was very important for me to be included in a group of anthropologists, to deepen and broaden my understanding of this discipline that I love. Thank you to my copyeditor David Hawkins for his careful and respectful editing of the thesis and to Graeme Currie for proofreading the book manuscript. Thank you also to the team at transcript Verlag for taking good care of me, especially Johanna Tönsing and Mark Schäfers.

Thank you also to all of my wonderful friends for supporting me every step of the way and for constant reminding me that there are other things in life besides work. Without your warm friendship, my life would not be fulfilled. Special thanks to Viktoria and Sophie for reading abstracts, articles, chapters and listening to my pre-presentations, worries, hopes and everything. And thank you to Teresa, Julia, Sophie, Viktoria, Julie, Deepa, Maria and Aisha for showing me that friendship has no borders.

Merci and danke to my family: to my mother and father for supporting all my professional and private decisions no matter what and for transmitting to me the feeling that I can always rely on their love and support. Thank you to my brothers for being good role models and for the four cutest nephews. Finally, I want to say thank you to my partner Christoph for going through this long process together with me. Thanks for accommodating a long-distance relationship between Vienna, Frankfurt, Sion and Lausanne and for coming to live with me in Lausanne and exploring Swiss life together. Also thank you for adding an artistic touch to the thesis by contributing your amazing drawings. Love. Looking forward to our new little adventure. Love to my son, Pablito.
