

Table of Contents

---

|                                                                                             |    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| Foreword                                                                             |    |
| by Otthein Rammstedt                                                                 | 9  |
| Introductory Remarks                                                                 | 13 |
| PART I: GEORG SIMMEL AS A SOCIAL SCIENTIST                                           | 21 |
| Introduction to Part I: Georg Simmel as a Social Scientist                           | 23 |
| 1. Georg Simmel: His Life and Work                                                   | 27 |
| Introduction. A Biographical Sketch                                                         | 27 |
| Georg Simmel and the Social Sciences                                                        | 28 |
| The Object of Sociology                                                                     | 37 |
| The Concept of Sociation                                                                    | 39 |
| Wechselwirkung . A Sketch for a Relational Sociology                                 | 40 |
| The Concept of the ‘Forms of Sociation’                                                     | 44 |
| The Concept of Form in Simmel’s Philosophy of Life                                          | 50 |
| The Problem Areas of Sociology                                                              | 51 |
| You and Me                                                                                  | 52 |
| A Look Back, a Look Ahead                                                                   | 53 |
| 2. The Making of Georg Simmel as a Social Scientist                                  | 55 |
| Introduction                                                                                | 55 |
| On the Influences of Völkerpsychologie                                               | 56 |
| On the Influences of Gustav Schmoller and the Younger Historical School of National Economy | 59 |
| On the Influences of Herbert Spencer, Charles Darwin and Social-Darwinism                   | 66 |
| On the Influences of Kant and the Dialogue with Neo-Kantianism                              | 69 |
| On the Influences of Karl Marx and Marxism                                                  | 79 |
| On the Philosophy of Life and the Influences of Henri Bergson                               | 89 |
| A Look Back, a Look Ahead                                                                   | 91 |

|                                                                                                                           |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 3. The Philosophy of Money: History, Intentions, Perspective, Methodology                                          | 95  |
| Introduction                                                                                                              | 95  |
| From ‘On the Psychology of Money’ toThe Philosophy of Money                                                    | 97  |
| ‘On the Psychology of Money’                                                                                              | 100 |
| The Lines of Continuity and Divergence between ‘On thePsychology of Money’ and The Philosophy of Money         | 104 |
| On Simmel’s Distancing of Himself from the Influences ofHerbert Spencer and Social-Darwinism between1889 and 1900 | 109 |
| Georg Simmel’s Dialogue with Heinrich Rickert during theWriting of The Philosophy of Money                     | 113 |
| The Purpose and Methodology of The Philosophy of Money                                                             | 116 |
| The Influence of Simmel’s Conception of Philosophyon the Structure of The Philosophy of Money                  | 118 |
| Why Should We Take the Theory of Value be theCentral Theme of The Philosophy of Money ?                        | 120 |
| A Look Back                                                                                                               | 122 |
| Digression: Simmel on the Marxian Theory of Value                                                              | 123 |
| Introduction                                                                                                              | 123 |
| The Marxian Theories of Value                                                                                      | 124 |
| Georg Simmel on the Marxian Labour Theory of Value                                                                        | 131 |
| PART II: GEORG SIMMEL’S THEORY OF VALUE                                                                        | 143 |
| Introduction to Part II: Georg Simmel’s Theory of Value                                                            | 145 |
| 4. An Analytical Theory of Value                                                                               | 151 |
| Introduction                                                                                                              | 151 |
| On Being and Value                                                                                                        | 152 |
| The Differentiation of Subject and Object in theProcesses of Valuation                                                | 153 |
| On the Relationality of Values                                                                                            | 156 |
| On Exchange                                                                                                               | 158 |
| On Relativity and Absoluteness                                                                                            | 161 |
| Why not a Relational Approach?                                                                                            | 163 |
| Simmel’s Theory of Economic Value                                                                                         | 164 |
| On Sacrifice                                                                                                              | 165 |
| On Equivalence                                                                                                            | 166 |
| Which Goods become Objects of Economic Valuation? FromUsefulness to Desirability, from Scarcity to Sacrifice          | 167 |
| A Look Back, a Look Ahead                                                                                                 | 171 |

|                                                        |     |
|--------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 5. An Analysis of Money                         | 173 |
| Introduction                                           | 173 |
| Money as the Reification of a Social Function          | 174 |
| The Value of Money                                     | 176 |
| An Ahistorical Analysis of the Emergence of Money.     |     |
| From Substance to Function Money                       | 179 |
| Trust in Money                                         | 183 |
| The Characteristics of Money                           | 184 |
| The Double Role of Money                               | 187 |
| The Levelling Effects of Money and Their Consequences  | 188 |
| Money as a Reducer of Ambiguity                        | 190 |
| Money as a Means of Exchange. Money as a Goal          | 191 |
| The Types of Personality that Derive from Considering  |     |
| Money as the Highest Value                             | 193 |
| The Social Meaning of Money                            | 198 |
| A Look Back, a Look Ahead                              | 200 |
| 6. A Synthetic Theory of Value.             |     |
| The Modern ‘Styles of Life’                     | 201 |
| Introduction                                           | 201 |
| Money as an Object of Everyday Life                    | 202 |
| On Having and Being                                    | 204 |
| On Quantification and Calculability                    | 208 |
| On Means, Goals and Rationalization                    | 209 |
| The Characterlessness of Money: Equality and Exclusion | 211 |
| On Individual Freedom                                  | 214 |
| The Conflict of Modern Culture and Modern Lifestyles   | 218 |
| A Look Back                                            | 225 |
| Epilogue: The Value of Culture              | 227 |
| Bibliography                                | 233 |

