

Contents

Foreword	11
Prologue	13
Introduction	25
Chapter 1 – Devil’s Island	33
1.1. “Will you decipher the name?”	35
1.2. The island takes shape	38
Rijkswaterstaat enters the scene	43
1.3. Enrolling a name	47
1.4. Testing a hypothesis	51
1.5. The need for mediated control	55
Unification of the Rhine	56
Mechanisation of inland navigation	57
Managing distance and proximity	59
Centralisation as prestige	60
Oversight and overview of traffic	61
1.6. A control room on Devil’s Island	63
Growing infrastructural complexity	63
Rijkswaterstaat in transition	64
River masters at the frontier of changes	66
Conceptual development of the Dordrecht control room	67
Establishment of a control room on Devil’s Island	69
1.7. Conclusion	70
Chapter 2 – The Mediatisation of Work	73
2.1. The anthropological interest in historiography	76
Archives: structured absence	77
Situating oral history	79
2.2. (Former) skippers with nautical media skills	84

Joining and (never really) leaving a community of practice	84
Mediatisation	89
2.3. Dordrecht control room (start-up) problems	90
A kitchen and bathroom in the control room	92
2.4. A first professional rivalry	95
2.5. Formalisation of work	100
Initial formalisation left room for operators	100
Loose learning on board in a formal structure	101
Early media technology affords autonomy	103
Simulatable	104
2.6. Managers contesting professionalisation of operators	107
The managerial trend	107
Becoming a manager	108
Managerialised and mediatised work	114
2.7. Conclusion	120
Chapter 3 – Control room Prestige and Design intertwined	125
3.1. Traditions of making the control room (work) visible	125
The representational tradition of Rijkswaterstaat	136
Same control room photo, different readings	139
3.2. Combining workplace studies and media studies to avoid their pitfalls	144
3.3. Control room gatekeepers caught between prestige, concentration and resignation	146
The three phases of gatekeeping	147
Who gets in	149
Designing control room visits	150
Broken door (politics)	152
Historicising gatekeeping, seeing control futures	154
3.4. Conclusion	156
Chapter 4 – Tweeting operators	159
4.1. From broadcasting concerns to tweeting operators	161
Retired operator speaks	161
What tweeting can do	163
Who to follow?	165
4.2. Localising tweets	168
Persistent	168
Significant but less frequent	185
Expected but rarely encountered	190
4.3. Conclusion	195

Chapter 5 – Media of Separation	199
5.1. Navigating research: follow the practice	202
I. Following actors empirically	202
II. Action is distributed and dependent on media	202
III. Follow the practice of ordering	203
5.2. Boarding the ships	204
5.3. Undetermined future: conflicting priorities in navigating rivers	207
Episode one: accounting and steering clear—navigational ordering seen from the wheelhouse	207
Episode two: Conflicting temporalities of navigation—seen from the control room	211
5.4. Just in time: navigating competition, speed and low water	213
Episode one: closing time window—balancing draft, speed and riverbed	213
Episode two: losing time—the collective problem of acceleration	214
Episode three: stealing time—breaking agreements and consensus	215
5.5. Resting time: navigating with assemblages of surveillance	217
5.6. Asynchronous times: navigating shipping and family life	219
Episode one: pockets of synchronous time—stacking intimate orderings on others	220
Episode two: solitary time—media compete for attention	221
Episode three: sharing time and space—enduring intolerance	223
Episode four: sharing time and space—active negotiation between orderings	225
5.7. Conclusion	226
Conclusion	229
1. Presumed invisibility	230
2. Transdisciplinary	232
3. Theoretical contributions	233
4. Revisiting Cognition in the Wild	236
Every field its own question?	239
Embodied navigation of risk	240
Navigating is infrastructuring	242
Literature	245
List of Figures	263

