Justin Friedrich Krahé

Legal Services and the European Convention on Human Rights

Securing Private Rights and Public Interests

Beiträge zum ausländischen öffentlichen Recht und Völkerrecht

Edited by the Max Planck Society for the Advancement of Science represented by Prof. Dr. Armin von Bogdandy and Prof. Dr. Anne Peters

Volume 340

Justin Friedrich Krahé

Legal Services and the European Convention on Human Rights

Securing Private Rights and Public Interests

Open Access funding provided by Max Planck Society.

The Deutsche Nationalbibliothek lists this publication in the Deutsche Nationalbibliografie; detailed bibliographic data are available on the Internet at http://dnb.d-nb.de

a.t.: Heidelberg, Ruprecht-Karls-Universität, Diss., 2024

1st Edition 2025

© Justin Friedrich Krahé

Published by Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft mbH & Co. KG Waldseestraße 3–5 | 76530 Baden-Baden www.nomos.de

Production of the printed version: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft mbH & Co. KG

Waldseestraße 3-5 | 76530 Baden-Baden

ISBN (Print): 978-3-7560-1009-7 ISBN (ePDF): 978-3-7489-4662-5

DOI: https://doi.org/10.5771/9783748946625

Online Version Nomos eLibrary

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License.

Acknowledgements

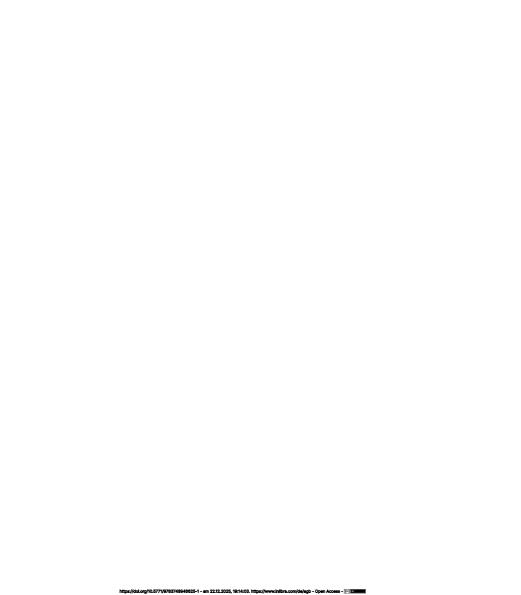

The present volume is based on my doctoral thesis, defended at the Faculty of Law, Heidelberg University on 10 July 2024 and updated to include developments and case law until August 2024.

I am deeply indebted to my supervisor Professor Anne Peters for her invaluable advice and constant encouragement at all stages of this project from its inception to its completion. I also thank Professor Ute Mager for chairing the viva and Professors Daniel Halberstam and Martin Borowski for agreeing to be rapporteurs on my thesis. I am grateful to my colleagues and friends at the Max Planck Institute for Comparative Public Law and International Law for valuable input on parts of the text at various stages. I also thank the German Academic Scholarship Foundation for providing a doctoral scholarship for my research, and the Max Planck Society for enabling its Open Access publication.

Most of all, I thank my wife, my family and my friends for their unwavering support.

Frankfurt/Lausanne, August 2024

Justin Friedrich Krahé

Overview

Table of Contents	11
Table of Abbreviations	23
Summary	25
Chapter One: Introduction, Case Selection and Definitions	27
 I. Legal services at the intersection of private and public interests 	28
II. International law on legal services: Setting the scene for the study	32
III. The European Convention on Human Rights and legal servicesIV. Case selection and definitions	49 54
Chapter Two: Legal Services and the Client's Private Interests: The Internal Dimension	69
I. Foundation of trust for the relationship between client and lawyer	70
II. An autonomously determined relationship between lawyer and clientIII. Conclusion: Convention protection for the internal	121
dimension of legal services	151
Chapter Three: Legal Services and the Client's Private Interests: The External Dimension	153
I. Protection for legal services provided at the domestic level II. Protection for legal services regarding individual	153
applications under Art. 34 ECHR III. Conclusion: Protecting the client's private interest in legal	190
services	197

Overview

Chapter Four:	Legal Services and Lawyers' Private Interests	201
I. The	Court's case law protecting the provision of legal
serv	ices	201
II. A 'w	atchdog' function for lawyers?	208
III. Con	clusion: Legal services and lawyers' private interests	221
Chapter Five:	The Public Interest in Legal Services in the Court's
	Case Law	223
	'special status of lawyers' as part of the 'very heart of
	Convention system'	225
	ific arrangements for legal services?	260 clusion: The public interest in legal services in the
Cou	rt's case law	306
Chapter Six:	'Essential' to the Convention System: Comparing
_	Legal Services and the Media	309
I. A ter	mplate for legal services? The Court's case law on the
med	ia	309
II. The	Court's case law on the media and on legal services:
	lar problems, different analyses	324
III. Con	clusion: Comparing legal services and the media	354
Chapter Seven:	Convention Obligations Beyond Rights: An
1	Introduction to Undirected Duties	355
I. A tyj	pology of duties: Rights-based, non-rights-based,
direc	cted and undirected	356
II. Und	irected duties in the law	360
III. Und	irected duties in Convention law	362
IV. Con	clusion: Undirected duties under the Convention	391

Chapter Eight: Individualistic and Systemic Conceptions of Human Rights	393
I. Individualistic conceptions of human rights II. Systemic conceptions of human rights	399 410
III. Mixing individualistic and systemic conceptions leads to inconsistent case law	425
IV. Why does the Court draw on systemic conceptions?	447
V. Conclusion: Individualistic and systemic conceptions of
human rights	452
Chapter Nine: Combining Rights and Undirected Duties to Protect Legal Services under the Convention	453
I. The Court's vision of the public interest in legal services	454
II. Undirected duties and individual rights: Disconnect	455
III. Undirected duties and individual rights: Harmony	460
IV. Undirected duties and individual rights: Conflict	470
V. Conclusion: Combining rights and undirected duties	476
Chapter Ten: What Do Undirected Duties Add?	477
I. Added explanatory value	478
II. Remedying the problems in the current case law	481
III. Conclusion: The advantages of combining rights and undirected duties	497
Conclusions, Outlook and Directions for Further Research	499
Zusammenfassung in deutscher Sprache	505
Table of ECtHR Cases Cited	517
Bibliography	529
Index of terms and key cases	541

Table of Contents

Table of Abbreviations	23
Summary	25
Chapter One: Introduction, Case Selection and Definitions	27
I. Legal services at the intersection of private and public interestsII. International law on legal services: Setting the scene for	28
the study	32
1. Soft law on legal services	33
(a) Soft law standards from the UN system	34
i. The 1990 UN Basic Principles on the Role of
Lawyers	34
ii. The UN Special Rapporteur on the Independence of Judges and Lawyers	36
iii. The 'right to defend human rights'	36
(b) Council of Europe Recommendation R(2000)21 on the freedom of exercise of the profession of lawyer	38
(c) Soft law standards by international NGOs	39
2. Hard international law on legal services	45
3. A 'European Convention on the Profession of Lawyer'?	47
4. Legal services and international human rights law	47
III. The European Convention on Human Rights and legal
services	49
1. Research questions	50
2. Structure of inquiry and chapter overview	50
IV. Case selection and definitions	54
1. Case selection	55
2. Definitions	57
(a) The Court's understanding of the terms 'legal services' and 'lawyer'	58
i. The Court's references to 'legal services'	58
ii. The Court's references to 'lawyers'	59

	iii. The Court's rationale for legal services	62
(b)	Definitions used in the course of the study	63
	i. 'Legal services'	63
	ii. 'Lawyer' and 'client'	64
	iii. 'Bar associations'	64
	iv. 'Private interest' and 'public interest'	65
3. A no	ote on interactions with domestic legal systems:
Trai	nslations and references	68
•	egal Services and the Client's Private Interests: The
I	nternal Dimension	69
I. Founda	ation of trust for the relationship between client
and lav	vyer	70
1. Free	e choice of lawyer	71
(a)	Criminal defence through legal assistance of the accused's choosing, Art. 6 § 3 (c) ECHR	73
	i. Dvorski [GC] and the principle of informed choice	74
	ii. The importance of free choice of lawyer as conducive to trust	81
	iii. Abusive bans on legal representation	82
(b)	Correia de Matos [GC] and defending oneself in person, Art. 6 § 3 (c) ECHR	84
(c)	Protection of choice of legal services rather than choice of lawyer	85
	nmunication between client and lawyer	86
(a)	Freedom to communicate between client and	0.7
	lawyer	87
	i. Freedom of communication as the rule	88
	ii. Restrictions in the context of counter-terrorism law	89
		09
	iii. Art. 34 ECHR and freedom to communicate with representatives before the Court	92
	iv. Communication with detained clients	93
	v. A right for the client or the lawyer?	95
	vi. Conclusion: Freedom to communicate between	75
	client and lawyer	96
	2 001000 00011 y 01	70

		(b)	Freedom to communicate confidentially between
			client and lawyer	96
			i. Confidential communication as a prerequisite of effective legal services	98
			ii. Confidential communication with detainees	102
			iii. Covert surveillance, particularly wiretaps	107
			iv. Search and seizure at lawyers' premises	110
			v. Requirements on lawyers to report on their clients ('gatekeeper' legislation)	115
			vi. Enforcement of the confidentiality norm	119
II.	Ar	aut	onomously determined relationship between
	lav	vyer	and client	121
	1.	Stat	e responsibility for lawyers' actions?	122
		(a)	The State's due diligence obligation to remedy
			severe shortcomings in legal services	124
		(b)	The State's obligation to counter manifest failings in the provision of legal services in practice	128
		(c)	Conclusion: State responsibility for lawyers' actions	132
	2.	The	Court's vision of high-quality legal services	133
		(a)	Activity and attendance	135
		(b)	Defence of the client's interests	136
		(c)	Communication with the client	138
		(d)	Preparation of the case	141
		(e)	Lawyers' expertise	142
			Lawyers' independence	145
		(g)	The client's contribution	147
		(h)	Sources of quality standards	148
		(i)	Domestic rules on professional negligence	149
		(j)	Conclusion: The Court's vision of high-quality legal
			services	150
III.	Co	onclu	ision: Convention protection for the internal di	mens	sion of legal services	151

Chapter Three: Legal Services and the Client's Private Interests: The External Dimension	153
I. Protection for legal services provided at the domestic level	153
1. Freedom of expression for lawyers exercising representative functions	154
(a) Freedom of expression in court proceedings	158
i. Nikula v Finland and conflicts between lawyers and prosecutors	158
ii. Kyprianou v Cyprus [GC] and conflicts between lawyers and judges	161
iii. Conflicts between lawyers and experts	163
iv. Elevated protection for statements made in judicial proceedings	165
(b) Freedom of expression outside the courtroom	170
i. Schöpfer v Switzerland	171
ii. Morice v France [GC]	172
iii. Morice in practice	176
(c) Freedom of expression on 'non-legal' topics	180
(d) Relationship between lawyers' and clients' rights	181
(e) Conclusion: Freedom of expression for lawyers exercising representative functions	182
2. Protection of legal services in fields other than freedom of expression	183
(a) Protection against physical attacks by State actors	183
(b) No additional protection against physical attacks
by non-State actors	188
(c) Additional protection against unlawful detention	100
by the State	189
II. Protection for legal services regarding individual	100
applications under Art. 34 ECHR	190
1. A protective regime for legal services related to	101
individual applications	191
2. The relationship between the applicant's and the	194
representative's rights	194
3. Minimum quality requirements under Art. 34 ECHR4. Abstract risk suffices	195
III. Conclusion: Protecting the client's private interest in legal	170
services	197
301 11003	エクノ

Chapter Four: Legal Services and Lawyers' Private Interests	201
I. The Court's case law protecting the provision of legal
services	201
1. Protection of access to the legal profession	202
2. Protection of exercise of the legal profession	202
3. Protection of lawyers' professional reputation	203
4. Occasional reinforcement by reference to the public interest	205
5. Protection against disbarment	207
II. A 'watchdog' function for lawyers?	208
1. The public interest in lawyers' expertise	209
2. Reznik v Russia	211
3. Lawyers' freedom to comment	214
4. Limits to lawyers' freedom to comment	216
5. The public interest in comment by lawyers	218
III. Conclusion: Legal services and lawyers' private interests	221
Chapter Five: The Public Interest in Legal Services in the Court's
Case Law	223
I. The 'special status of lawyers' as part of the 'very heart of the Convention system'	225
1. 'The special status of lawyers'	227
(a) Casado Coca and the origins of the Nikula dictum	231
(b) The Nikula dictum as a means of restricting rights	235
2. 'The very heart of the Convention system'	240
(a) Elçi and others v Turkey	242
(b) Elçi as protecting the legal profession	244
(c) Aliyev v Azerbaijan and the public interest in legal
services	248
(d) Elçi in the Court's case law	252
3. 'The legal profession'	257
II. Specific arrangements for legal services?	260
 A (partially) regulated market for legal services? 	261
(a) Reservation of the provision of legal services	261
i. Reservations based on qualification	264
ii. Reservations based on personal standing	267
iii. Liberalising tendencies	270

(b) A sustainable economic basis?	271
2. A separate administrative regime for legal services?	275
(a) Separate disciplinary rules?	275
i. Disciplinary law as a particularly sensitive area	276
ii. Disciplinary law as a component of the Court's vision	280
(1) Lower requirements for 'quality of the law'	281
(2) Procedural rights in disciplinary law	282
iii. Delegation to professional bodies	284
iv. Conclusion: Separate disciplinary rules for
lawyers	285
(b) The role of Bar associations	286
i. Bar associations as part of the State	288
(1) State responsibility for Bar associations	289
(2) Legal consequences of the State's responsibility for Bar associations	292
(3) In particular: No standing for Bar associations under Art. 34 ECHR	294
ii. The 'independence' of Bar associations – self-regulation?	299
III. Conclusion: The public interest in legal services in the
Court's case law	306
Chapter Six: 'Essential' to the Convention System: Comparing
Legal Services and the Media	309
I. A template for legal services? The Court's case law on the
media	309
1. The Court's view of the media's function in the	005
Convention system	310
2. Case law securing the media's ability to fulfil their
Convention functions	314
(a) The State as the 'ultimate guarantor of pluralism'	315
(b) The obligation to create 'a favourable environment for participation in public debate'	317
(c) The independence of the media	317
(d) The obligation to protect the media against State and non-State attacks	318
(e) Protecting the public's right to receive information	320

(1) Elevatea protection only for responsible journalism'	321
(g) Pluralism as a justification for restricting rights	322
(h) Expanding case law to other actors fulfilling similar functions to journalists	323
II. The Court's case law on the media and on legal services:
Similar problems, different analyses	324
1. Media and legal services: Doctrinal similarities	324
(a) Structural differences between the case law on media and on legal services	325
(b) Special legal regimes for both the media and legal
services	326
i. Protection against the State	327
ii. Independence	328
iii. Differences regarding protection and restriction of rights?	329
iv. The Court's greater awareness of the public interest in the media	333
2. Media and legal services: The Court's analyses	335
(a) Human rights in the interests of others	336
(b) Rights to provide and receive	341
(c) The Court's difficulties with legal services: Mesić v
Croatia as a model case	343
3. The Court's case law on the media: A source of inspiration for the case law on legal services?	350
III. Conclusion: Comparing legal services and the media	354
Chapter Seven: Convention Obligations Beyond Rights: An
Introduction to Undirected Duties	355
I. A typology of duties: Rights-based, non-rights-based,
directed and undirected	356
1. Duties based on rights and duties based on other concerns	357
2. Directed and undirected duties	358
II. Undirected duties in the law	360
1. Undirected duties in constitutional law	361
2. Undirected duties in public international law	362

III.	Uı	ndire	cted duties in Convention law	362
	1.	The	Convention imposes undirected duties on States	362
			mples of undirected duties from the Court's case
		law	1	365
		(a)	The State's duty to maintain a Convention-
		` ,	compliant judiciary	366
		(b)
		` ,	government	372
		(c)	The State's duty to maintain a functioning
		, ,	executive	374
		(d)	The State's 'obligation to protect the rule of law and prevent arbitrariness'	375
		(e)	The State's duty as 'the ultimate guarantor of pluralism'	375
		(f)	The State's duty to maintain separation of powers	377
		(g)	The State's duty to take climate action	378
		(h)	Undirected duties as reflecting public interests	379
	3.	Pos	sible reasons for the lack of attention to undirected
		duti	es	380
		(a)	The individual application mechanism's focus on
			directed duties	381
		(b)	Convention scholarship's focus on rights and
			directed duties	384
		(c)	The Convention's assumption that undirected
			duties will not be violated	385
		(d)	Insufficient inspiration from domestic human rights law	387
		(e)	Public international law is not traditionally understood as regulating domestic organisational
			law	389
IV	C_{ℓ}	anch	usion. Undirected duties under the Convention	391

Chapter Eight: Individualistic and Systemic Conceptions of Human Rights	393
I. Individualistic conceptions of human rights	399
Individualistic conceptions in moral human rights	3,7,7
theory	400
(a) Interest theories of rights as individualistic	100
conceptions	402
(b) The role of public interests in individualistic
conceptions	405
2. Individualistic conceptions of Convention rights	406
II. Systemic conceptions of human rights	410
Systemic conceptions in moral human rights theory	411
2. Systemic conceptions of Convention rights	415
3. Role-bearer rights as an example of the shortcomings of individualistic conceptions?	418
(a) Moral human rights debate on journalists as role-bearers	420
(b) Lawyers as a particularly complicated case of role-bearer rights	423
III. Mixing individualistic and systemic conceptions leads to inconsistent case law	425
1. Tensions regarding scope ratione personae	426
(a) Is a private interest always required?	426
(b) Is a private interest always sufficient?	428
(c) Can the categories of scope ratione personae and ratione materiae be maintained on a systemic understanding?	430
2. Tensions regarding scope ratione materiae	431
(a) Is a private interest always required?	431
(b) Is a private interest always sufficient?	435
3. The Court's proportionality analysis as essentially premised on an individualistic conception	436
(a) Suitability	438
(b) Necessity	441
(c) Balancing	443
4. Procedural implications	446

IV. Why does the Court draw on systemic conceptions?1. Systemic conceptions as a coincidental by-product of	447
case law evolution	448
2. Systemic conceptions as an attempt to expand the	110
State's duties	450
V. Conclusion: Individualistic and systemic conceptions of	150
human rights	452
numun rights	132
Chapter Nine: Combining Rights and Undirected Duties to Protect
Legal Services under the Convention	453
I. The Court's vision of the public interest in legal services	454
II. Undirected duties and individual rights: Disconnect	455
1. Only private interests involved	455
(a) No link to legal activities whatsoever	456
(b) General right of lawyers to exercise their profession	456
(c) Attacks on lawyers by private individuals	457
(d) 'Exceptional circumstances' cases	458
2. Only public interests involved	459
III. Undirected duties and individual rights: Harmony	460
1. Elevated protection for the internal lawyer-client relationship, particularly confidential communication	460
(a) Freedom to communicate confidentially	461
(b) An autonomously determined relationship	463
2. Elevated protection for lawyers' external activities	464
(a) Freedom of expression for lawyers in court proceedings	464
(b) Protection of lawyers against the State in fields
other than freedom of expression	466
3. Protection against disbarment	467
4. Watchdog cases	468
5. The Elçi doctrine as recognition of the State's
undirected duties?	469
IV. Undirected duties and individual rights: Conflict	470
1. Lawyers' freedom of expression outside the courtroom	470
2. State regulation of legal services	471
3. Protecting legal services against third parties	473
4 Recognition of the conflict cases in the Convention?	171

5. The Nikula doctrine as recognition of the State's
undirected duties?	474
V. Conclusion: Combining rights and undirected duties	476
Chapter Ten: What Do Undirected Duties Add?	477
I. Added explanatory value	478
1. Explain why the right applied makes little difference	478
2. Explain why the applicant's person makes little difference	479
3. Explain why the Court tests for scope twice	480
4. Explain why the Court sets out general measures	481
II. Remedying the problems in the current case law	481
1. Clarity regarding the point of reference	482
(a) Point of reference for the directed duty: The individual's interests	482
(b) Point of reference for the undirected duty: The rule of law and the administration of justice	483
2. Greater clarity regarding the State's undirected duties	483
(a) Clarity regarding the legal bindingness of the State's
undirected duties	484
(b) Clarity regarding the content of the State's
undirected duties	486
i. Separating between margin of appreciation and minimum requirements	486
ii. Does the public interest justify reservation of legal services to a certain group?	487
iii. Does the public interest require protecting only certain legal services?	488
(1) Does the State's undirected duty require elevated protection of activities other than
human rights defence?	488
(2) Does the State's undirected duty require
elevated protection of activities other than litigation?	489
(3) Which case law is transferable?	490
(c) Clarity regarding who may invoke the State's
undirected duties	491

Table of Contents

3. More stringent use of proportionality analysis	494
(a) Application of proportionality analysis	495
(b) Clearer criteria for balancing	495
III. Conclusion: The advantages of combining rights and
undirected duties	497
Conclusions, Outlook and Directions for Further Research	499
Zusammenfassung in deutscher Sprache	505
Table of ECtHR Cases Cited	517
Bibliography	529
Index of terms and key cases	541

Table of Abbreviations

(dec) Decision

CCBE Council of Bars and Law Societies of Europe

CFR Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

CJEU Court of Justice of the European Union
ECHR European Convention on Human Rights

ECJ European Court of Justice

ECtHR European Court of Human Rights

GC Grand Chamber

IBA International Bar Association

ICCPR International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

UDHR Universal Declaration on Human Rights

UIA Union Internationale des Avocats

Summary

Protection of legal services by means of human rights instruments is a complex matter. Legal representation and advice advance the private interests of clients and lawyers. Simultaneously, they further the general public interest in the rule of law. Since traditional understandings of human rights focus primarily on human rights as protecting the interests of the rights holder, this can lead to tensions: Here, human rights instruments protect not only private, but also public interests, arguably going beyond the ambit of individual rights to regulate questions of State organisation and adding a further dimension of 'constitutional' significance to human rights law.

This study assesses how the European Court of Human Rights has dealt with this interplay of private and public interests. It aims to answer two research questions:

What obligations securing the private and public interests in legal services does the Court's case law impose on States?

Does the Court's approach to cases involving legal services comprehensively reflect the private and public interests involved while maintaining consistency with the rest of its case law, or are there other ways of reflecting these interests which are both more comprehensive and consistent?

In a first, doctrinal part (Chapter Two to Chapter Five), the study determines States' obligations by setting out the Court's case law on legal services. While the Court emphasises the public interest in legal services rhetorically, highlighting the 'special status of lawyers' as 'part of the very heart of the Convention system', it does not assign this public interest a clear normative status. Instead, it takes only the private interests of individuals as its point of departure, modifying these in light of their relationship with the public interest in legal services. This leads to inconsistent and incomplete case law, which at times elevates the level of protection applicants will enjoy, but at other times limits their rights without clear justification.

¹ Nikula v Finland App no 31611/96 (ECtHR, 21 March 2002), para 45, discussed in detail in Chapter Five, 227ff.

² Elçi and others v Turkey App no 23145/93; 25091/94 (ECtHR, 13 November 2003), para 669, discussed in detail in Chapter Five, 240ff.

In a second, conceptual part (Chapter Six to Chapter Ten), the study then examines whether this analysis focused exclusively on obligations owed to individuals can convincingly explain the case law. It begins by comparing the case law on legal services to the case law on the media, since in both areas the exercise of private rights also serves public interests (pluralism/democracy for the media). It is then argued that the Court's difficulties flow from the fact that it focuses only on rights and the corresponding directed duties and ignores undirected duties under the Convention. The use of rights to protect public interests is problematic because most of the Court's general doctrines, particularly as regards the scope of the Convention rights and proportionality analysis, have been developed on an individualistic vision of human rights as protecting the rights bearer regardless of whether their activities further any public interest.

The study then proposes an alternative analysis which recognises that the Convention has the capacity not only to impose on States directed duties with corresponding individual rights protecting private interests, but also undirected duties protecting public interests. One of these is the obligation to ensure that legal services exist. Using this second category, the Court's case law can be understood as the result of the relationship between the obligation to protect the applicant's private interests and the public-interest obligation to protect legal services. Where a case touches on both of these obligations, the obligations can be in harmony or conflict, which explains the variations in the level of human rights protection the Court accords. However, clearly separating into two different obligations has the advantage of providing a clearer standard because the impact on the applicant's private interests and on the public interest in legal services can be determined separately.

The study thus establishes that the Court's case law imposes on States certain obligations in the public interest which cannot be reduced to individual rights. While the main focus here is on legal services, similar obligations exist in a number of other areas of the Court's case law, including on judicial organisation, democratic procedures, separation of powers or the rule of law. This finding indicates that beyond protection of individual rights, the Convention also regulates elements of the internal organisation of the State and therefore exhibits 'constitutional' features in a broader sense than previously assumed.