The Trinity Index: Radioactive Contamination and Photographic Inscription

Eva Castringius works at the intersection of photographic practice, media theory, and the history of science. She is a research associate at the Caspar-David-Friedrich-Institut at Universität Greifswald, where she works in the field of New Media. Her research focuses on the epistemic conditions of photographic images, particularly scientific imaging and the role of photographic materials in knowledge production. She leads a DFG-funded research project on scientific photography.
