Alone we may stand in the face of death; but this book does not rest on my shoulders alone. Without the many companions who joined this (ad)venture along the way it would not have come to fruition. I have received so much support and inspiration from all parties involved and however large or small their contribution, I am incredibly grateful for that.

I want to express my gratitude to Annika Linnemann who patiently held my hand throughout the entire publication process, always answering my many questions with expertise and kindness. My thanks also goes to Johanna Tönsing for her support in navigating the external funding for this volume, as well as to Sean O'Dubhghaill's keen eye as the editor of this book. I would further like to thank Maria Arndt for so beautifully designing the cover of this book.

I owe special thanks to Elisabeth Bronfen, without whose expertise, guidance, and constructive criticism this volume would not stand the way it does now. Her input was seminal in shaping the trajectory of this book and our lively discussions throughout the process of writing this book I not only cherish but regard as that fertile ground on which this project ultimately stands. Special thanks also goes to Barbara Straumann, whose valuable feedback was as precise as it was seminal in the shaping of this project.

I would also like offer my sincerest gratitude to Angela Ferreira who so patiently disentangled my, at (many) times, lengthily crafted thoughts and has remained a corrective pair of eyes by my side throughout the many versions that this volume underwent.

Special thanks also goes to Zoë Lehmann Imfeld who continually held my hand as these lines came to a close and never grew tired of reading new and improved paragraphs.

I also need to thank Dominique Schneider who aided me in collecting all the illustrations while the deadline kept inching closer and closer.

For their moral support I want to thank my father, Pius Castelli, as well as Eva Bruchmann, Morgane Ghilardi, Bryanna Harbeke, Simone Karpf, Kim Robe, Alicia Schümperli and Manuel Vogelsang.

My gratitude also goes to the SNF (Schweizerischer Nationalfonds) for their generous financial support.

And finally, I must also acknowledge all the other voices lending advice during the time this project came to fruition. Thank you for taking the time to read through and offer suggestions for unfinished thoughts, unedited sentences and claims not yet disentangled. This volume would not stand without you.
