

Authors

Etannibi E. O. Alemika obtained a BSc and an MSc in Sociology from the University of Ibadan, Nigeria. He also earned an MS and PhD in Criminology from the Center for Studies in Criminology and Criminal Law in the Department of Social Systems Sciences of the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania, USA. He has been a lecturer at the University of Jos, Nigeria, since 1980 and is currently a Professor of Criminology and Sociology of Law. His special interests are philosophy and sociology of law; criminological theory; police and policing; penal policy and prisons; drug laws and policy; and research methodology. He has published books, monographs, contributions, and articles in journals such as the International Journal of Comparative and Applied Criminal Justice; Police Studies; International Journal of Comparative Criminology and Offender Therapy; Journal of Criminal Justice; Africa Quarterly; Crime, Law and Social Change; and Police Practice and Research. Dr. Alemika is a member of various professional organizations and associations, including the American Society of Criminology; the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences; and the Social Science Academy of Nigeria. He has consulted for several international organizations and security agencies in Nigeria. Email: alemikae@yahoo.com

Berit Bliesemann de Guevara is a political scientist and senior lecturer in peace-building, post-war reconstruction, and transitional justice at Aberystwyth University, Wales. Previously, she has worked as a temporary professor at Bremen University's Institute for Intercultural and International Studies and as a lecturer at the Institute for International Politics at Helmut Schmidt University, Hamburg. For her PhD on the effects of international state-building on state rule in Bosnia and Herzegovina, she was awarded the German Studies Award 2009. She is author and editor of several publications on international peace and state-building, among them Illusion Statebuilding (edition Körber-Stiftung 2010; with Florian P. Kühn). Other research areas have included the causes and courses of intra-state wars, formal and informal knowledge production in interventions, and political charisma. Email: beb14@aber.ac.uk

Lorenzo Bodrero has worked for different organizations since studying communications and investigative journalism. Between 2008 and 2012 he was the manager of the communications department of FLARE (Freedom Legality and Rights in Europe), which is an NGO involved in the fight against transnational organized crime and corruption. Bodrero currently works as a freelance journalist, writing articles in Italian and English for monthly magazines Valori and Narcomafie, the Huffington Post, the network OCCRP and 100reporters. Email: lorenzo.bodrero@flarenetwork.org

Edgardo Buscaglia is a Senior Scholar in Law and Economics at Columbia University, USA; the Director of the International Law and Economics Development Center; and the President of the Institute for Citizens Action in Mexico. He has served also as Director of the International Law and Economic Development Center (1995–present). He was a visiting Professor of Law and Economics at the Mexican Autonomous Institute of Technology (2003–2011); University of Virginia (1999–2005); and Georgetown University (1995–1996). He served as a fellow at the Hoover Institution, Stanford University, between 1991 and 2008, and in different capacities as a staff member at the UN as well as an external adviser to the United Nations (between April 2001 and December 2003 and June 2010 and June 2011) and The World Bank (between June 1989 and January 2000). He co-founded the Inter-American Law and Economics Association.

He received his legal postdoctoral training in the Jurisprudence and Social Policy Program at the University of California at Berkeley. He also received a master's degree in Law and Economics and a PhD in Economics from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

Dr. Buscaglia studies the impact of legal and judicial frameworks on economic development, initially in Latin America but now more broadly. His current research focuses on the economic and legal analysis of transnational organized crime and private/public sector corruption. He provided advice to governments on these areas in 109 countries, including Afghanistan, Colombia, India, Mexico, and Russia. He has published widely on these subjects for peer-reviewed scientific journals and for mass media, such as The Wall Street Journal, The Financial Times, and the Süddeutsche Zeitung, among other media publications and hundreds of interviews. Email: eb2449@columbia.edu

Ignacio Cano received his joint PhD in Sociology and Social Psychology at the Universidad Complutense de Madrid, Spain, in 1991. From 1991 to 1993 he worked with a focus on refugees and war-stricken populations in El Salvador and was a member of the United Nations Truth Commission for El Salvador. Between 1993 and 1996, he undertook post-doctoral research at the universities of Surrey (UK), Michigan, and Arizona (USA), with the main focus on research methodology and program evaluation. Since 1996, he has been based in Rio de Janeiro, carrying out research for NGOs and at several universities on topics related to violence, human rights, public security, and education. He is currently an associate professor in research methodology at the Department of Social Sciences of the State University of Rio de Janeiro and the coordinator of the Laboratory for the Analysis of Violence of the same university. Over the last 15 years, he has published on different issues related to public security and human rights and has been a consultant and an evaluator for various projects related to these areas in several countries in the region. Email: icano@openlink.com.br

John Christensen directs the research advocacy work of the Tax Justice Network. Trained as an auditor and economist, he has worked in many countries around the world, and for 11 years he was Economic Adviser to the government of the British Channel Island of Jersey, a prominent secrecy jurisdiction. In the past 10 years he has become what The Guardian has described as “the unlikely figurehead of a worldwide campaign against tax avoidance.”

Christensen holds an honors degree in Applied Economics and an M.Phil in Economics and Law. He has also done post-graduate studies at Templeton College, Oxford, and the London School of Economics and Political Science. His work is sponsored by the Joseph Rowntree Charitable Trust and he is a Fellow of the Royal Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures and Commerce. Email: john@taxjustice.net

Charles Goredema is a political scientist and Senior Research Fellow at the Institute of Security Studies in Cape Town. He specializes in research on trends of organized crime and money laundering in East and Southern Africa. He also monitors the effectiveness and sustainability of strategies to combat organized crime, corruption, and money laundering in the region and around the world. A lawyer by profession, Goredema has been involved with criminal justice systems since his days as a prosecutor in the early 1980s. After teaching criminal justice courses at universities in Zimbabwe and South Africa between 1987 and 2000, he joined the Institute in mid-2000. He has published extensively on organized economic crime and money laundering. He has participated in numerous workshops, seminars, and conferences in Southern Africa and beyond. He holds a BL (Hons) and LLB from the University of Zimbabwe and an LLM from the University of London. Email: cgoredema@issafrica.org

Wolfgang Hees was born in 1960 in Porto Alegre, Brazil, and studied agriculture, anthropology, geography, and economics. He was the responsible desk officer for Caritas Germany projects in various Latin American countries between 1996 and 2012. The most important project was the community-driven, regional drug-prevention and harm-reduction program, which financed activities in 15 countries between Mexico and Chile. Besides working in Caritas, he is a lecturer at the Alice Salomon University, Berlin, for transcultural social work. Email: wolfgang.hees@web.de

Wolfgang Hetzer has been, among other things, Head of Department in the German Federal Chancellery, responsible for monitoring the German Federal Intelligence Service in the areas of organized crime, international money laundering, weapons of mass destruction, and strategic telecommunications surveillance. From 2002 to 2012, he worked at the European Anti-Fraud Office as Head of the Intelligence, Strategic Assessment & Analysis department and acted as a consultant to the General Director in matters of corruption. He is the author of numerous works and of several monographs, among others: Tatort Finanzmarkt – Geldwäsche zwischen Kriminalität (The Financial Market as a Crime Scene – Money Laundering, published in the magazine Wirtschaft und Politik, 2003); Finanzmafia – Wieso Banker und Banditen ohne Strafe davonkommen (The Finance Mafia – Why Bankers and Criminals Get Away With It, published in 2011); Demokratie in Europa zwischen Euro-Manie und Re-Nationalisierung (Democracy in Europe Between Euromania and Renationalisation, published in 2012); Finanzkrieg – Angriff auf den sozialen Frieden in Europa (Financial War – Europe's Peaceful Society Under Attack, published in 2013). Email: wolfgang.hetzer@t-online.de Christine Jojarth is a lecturer at Stanford University and an expert on transnational organized crime and energy policy, with a particular focus on institutional design and regulatory effectiveness. She regularly works as an advisor to governments and nongovernmental organizations, including the United Kingdom's Department for International Development, the International Monetary Fund, Transparency International, the Open Society Institute, the Revenue Watch Institute, and the Natural Resource Charter.

Her recent book, Crime, War, and Global Trafficking (published by Cambridge University Press in 2009), is a leading work on transnational organized crime and successful policy responses. It won the Furniss book award for its contribution to the study of international security.

Jojarth holds a PhD in International Political Economy from the London School of Economics and Political Science, United Kingdom; an MA in International Relations from the University of St. Gallen, Switzerland; and a License in Political Science from the Institut d'Etudes Politiques de Paris, France. Email: christine@jojarth.com

Marco Lara Klahr is a court reporter, researcher, activist, and international trainer for court reporters in Mexico and abroad. He has attended talks, conferences, and workshops and reported from 27 countries. He heads the Media and Information Access program at the Institute of Criminal Justice, is a member of the Advisory Board of the El Universal newspaper, and is a member of the team that prepares the Worlds Journalism Study (University of Munich). He is the author or co-author of 25 books, including ¡Son los derechos! Manual para periodistas sobre el sistema penal acusatorio (2012). His most recent book, entitled Extorsión y otros círculos del infierno, was published in February 2013 by Grijalbo. He was awarded the National Journalism Prize in 2000 and 2009, and he is a member of the jury for the German Walter Reuter Journalism Prize in Mexico. Email:marcolaraklahr_speaker@otromexico.com

Florian P. Kühn, PhD, is Senior Researcher and Lecturer at the Institute for International Politics at Helmut Schmidt University, Hamburg. His academic interests are the political economy of conflict; rentier states; liberal conceptions of peace; state and violence; relations between states and societies and the politics of sub-governmental actors; terrorism; international intervention; and knowledge production in international contexts. He has published various books, among them Illusion Statebuilding edition Körber-Stiftung 2010; with Berit Bliesemann de Guevara and in journals such as International Relations, International Peacekeeping, and the Canadian Foreign Policy Journal. He is co-editor of Journal of Intervention and Statebuilding. Email: florian.p.kuehn@hsu-hh.de

Arun Kumar has been teaching economics at the Center for Economic Studies and Planning, Jawaharlal Nehru University, since 1984 and is currently the Chairperson of the Center.

He went to Princeton University, USA, for a PhD in physics but in 1977 switched to a PhD program in economics at Jawaharlal Nehru University.

His book The Black Economy in India, published by Penguin, has broken new ground in thinking about the Indian economy and its development. He has specialized in development, public finance, and public policy and macroeconomics and published many articles in these areas. He has written on globalization and its impact on Indian Society and on issues pertaining to higher education in India. He also edited a book titled Challenges Facing Indian Universities. His latest work is Indian Economy since Independence.

He authored the Alternative Budgets for 1993–94 and 1994–95, which proposed alternative economic policies for India. These were presented before a group of eminent citizens of the country. He has been a member of the group producing the Alternative Economic Survey for the last 15 years. These documents provide an alternative analysis of official data. He has written in the popular press and parti-icipated in discussions in the electronic media. Email: arunkumar1000@hotmail.com

Claudio La Camera is a social and cultural policies expert and advisor, a project director of cooperation projects, as well as a trainer and freelancer for local public institutions, universities, and other organizations. He was Manager of the Museo della ndrangheta between 2007 and 2012. He is a scientific advisor for the foundation on transnational crime and a scientific assistant for the course on “Planning on Confiscated Properties” at la Sapienza University in Rome. He is the Director of the “Observatory on the preventive measures against organized crime” Reggio Calabria. Email: claudiolacamera@gmail.com

Ivana McIlwiane works as a police officer and as a scientist. In the Serbian police, she works for the anti-trafficking unit and is engaged in the overall police work regarding the trafficking of human beings (criminal investigation) and illegal migration.

Additionally, she is medical doctor, which explains her special interest and expertise in the area of trafficking organs, cells and tissues.

As an academic, she is currently writing her thesis about the trafficking of organs as one form of the Trafficking of Human Beings (THB). Methodologically, this involves a lot of research on official documents (EU-Council, OECE, police, UN, etc) to be able to map the routes of human trafficking.

Vincenzo Militello is full Professor of Criminal Law at the Law Faculty of the University of Palermo, where he directs the Department of Criminal Law and Criminology. He also conducts courses on European and International Criminal Law, Comparative Criminal Law, and Criminology. Among his main academic interests are the modern problems of criminal policy, also in consideration of the harmonization at the European and international levels, such as for transnational organized crime, cybercrime, and economic crime.

He has published more than 130 scientific works in different languages. He is a member of editorial boards of the following journals: European Journal of Crime, Criminal Law and Criminal Justice (publisher Kluwer Law International, 2002–present); Goldammer’s Archiv für Strafrecht (publisher Decker, Heidelberg 2002–present); Rivista trimestrale diritto penale dell’economia (CEDAM Padova 2010); and Archivio penale (2011).

He has been a member of the Committee for the Reform of the Italian Criminal Code, and was appointed to the Ministry of the Justice in Rome from 2001 to 2004. He worked as a project manager for the EU Falcone program “European Joint Project to Counter Organized Crime” of the City of Palermo between 1998 and 2001. Professor Militello has been the Honorary Consul of the Federal Republic of Germany in Palermo since July 2009. Email: vincenzo.militello@unipa.it

Christoph Reuter has covered Afghanistan since 2001 and lived in the country – as the only German correspondent – from 2008 to 2011.

In 2010, he took on the case of the bombing of alleged insurgents – ordered by a German colonel in Kunduz on the night of September 3, 2009. According to the official ISAF inquiry report, “between 17 and 142 people died” in the bombing. The military claimed that only insurgents were killed, while locals asserted that only civilians had died – as has happened dozens of times since 2001 in similar cases.

From December 2009 until March 2010, he went several times to Kunduz to investigate who precisely had died there: What had each person done that night, with whom had he gone to the trucks, how long had he spent at the site? At the end, there was a number, a book, and an exhibition: “Kunduz, 4. September 2009” Showing profiles of most of the 91 victims and giving an extremely detailed reconstruction of the night and its prologue.

Similar projects before have led to books on suicide bombings (My Life Is a Weapon, 2002, translated into eight languages); on Iraq; and on the short-lived freedom under the Palestinian Authority. Born in 1968, he has a degree in Islamic Science, worked as a reporter for GEO, stern, as a lecturer for “Investigative Reporting” in Iraq, Lebanon, and Germany, and is a correspondent for Der Spiegel in the Middle East. Email: Christoph_Reuter@spiegel.de

José Reveles was born in Mexico City and has dedicated more than 40 years to journalism. He has worked with different newspapers, journals, radio and television broadcasters in the country and was co-founder of the journal Proceso in 1976. His specialties are features on human rights and social issues: public and national security; militarism; penitentiary system; organized crime; corruption; kidnapping; violence against journalists; drugs trafficking; and more. On these issues he has also edited several books. As a journalist, he has worked all over Mexico and visited more than 30 countries. jrevels44@gmail.com

Aurélio Rios studied law at the University of Brasília and completed his post-graduate work (LLM in Public Law) at the University of Bristol, England. In 1987 he joined the Federal Public Ministry (Ministério Público Federal), where he held different roles in departments dealing with human rights, indigenous communities and minorities, consumer and economic rights, among other areas. He is the author of numerous articles on public, human, and indigenous rights in Brazil.

In 2012, Rios became head of the office of the Federal Prosecutor of the Republic for Citizens Rights. In this function, he is responsible for supervising governmental and public services regarding their respect and loyalty toward the human rights guaranteed in the Federal Constitution of Brazil and regarding the international treaties and conventions dealing with human rights that Brazil has acceded to. Email: aureliorios@pgr.mpf.gov.br

Jürgen Roth was born in Frankfurt am Main in 1945. He is one of the leading experts on organized crime in Germany. Since the 1970s, he has made a name for himself as an investigative journalist and produced numerous television documentaries and books on the subject of organized crime. His work has focused on Eastern Europe, Germany, international terrorism, and organized crime. In 2009, he published the highly informative, outspoken book Mafialand Deutschland (Mafia Country Germany), in which he tells how the Italian 'Ndrangheta and the Russian mafia infiltrate politics and the economy in Germany. A bestseller is his book Gangsterwirtschaft – wie die organisierte Kriminalität Deutschland aufkauft (How Organized Crime Buys Up Germany), about how German companies that were affected by the financial crisis are being rescued using illegal money, while politics and rich elites collaborate. His latest book is Gazprom – Das unheimliche Imperium (Gazprom – The Eerie Empire). The author lives in Frankfurt am Main. Email: kontakt@juergen-roth.com

Steffen Salvenmoser is a partner in the Forensic Services department of PricewaterhouseCoopers in Frankfurt/Main. He has also been heading the Forensic Services department of PwC Austria in Vienna since May 1, 2011.

Salvenmoser works regularly as a consultant on very different aspects of white-collar crime. He has a teaching position at the University of Osnabrück in the post-graduate course on Business Crime and another teaching assignment at Steinbeis University in Berlin, in the Institute for Risk & Fraud. He is a member of the University Council of the University of Aschaffenburg.

Before beginning work at PwC, Salvenmoser was a judge for two years and worked as a public prosecutor for more than six years at a public prosecutor's office dealing with economic crimes. He is a Certified Fraud Examiner and an accredited lawyer.

Regine Schönenberg is a political scientist who has been working on transnational organized crime for more than 15 years. She studied International Relations and Economic History at the London School of Economics and holds a PhD in Political Science from the Free University of Berlin. She has participated in the UNESCO/MOST research program on drugs and democracy. Her emphasis is on the interdependence of social transformation and the criminalization of whole life worlds, mainly in more informally regulated localities. Her research laboratory is the Brazilian Amazon, where her current research project for the Latin American Institute of the Free University is located. Additionally, she is interested in intercultural peer-learning processes, which she practices in summer schools once a year all over the world. Email: regschoen@aol.com

Ingrid Spiller studied Geography, Sociology of Societies in Transition, and International Agrarian Development in Berlin. She has been engaged in the area of North-South politics since the beginning of the 1980s, among other things as editor of the magazine Entwicklungspolitische Korrespondenz and as a public relations officer at Action for World Solidarity. She spent several years working as a freelance expert in development policy, focusing on rural development, women, and the media, and was a trainer in the areas of consultancy and gender training. She has had numerous stays abroad in Africa and Latin America.

Since 1998, Spiller has been a permanent employee of the Heinrich Böll Foundation, where she was first responsible for the International Grant Programme before becoming Head of the administrative department on International Policy as well as a representative of the Foreign Department.

From February 2007 to May 2012, she was Manager of the Mexico, Central America, and Caribbean regional office of the Heinrich Böll Foundation. At present, she is Head of the Latin America department at the Heinrich Böll Foundation in Berlin. Email: spiller@boell.de

Yama Torabi is a political scientist who holds a master's degree in Political Science and a PhD in International Relations at Sciences Po in Paris. He has been researching corruption to measure bribery and corruption in relation to governance, transparency, and accountability in Afghanistan. Currently, he is the executive director and responsible for the overall management, fund representation, and reporting to donors and the board. Before founding this organization, he worked for NGOs in the development and emergency field in Afghanistan and in other countries such as the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Email: yama.torabi@iwaweb.org

Tatiana Tropina is a senior researcher at the Max Planck Institute for Foreign and International Criminal Law, Freiburg, Germany. In this capacity she has been involved in different projects on fighting cybercrime with international organizations and academic institutions.

Since 2001, Tropina has studied criminological and legal aspects of cybercrime and cyberterrorism. She was the first Russian researcher to defend a PhD thesis on this subject in 2005.

Her current areas of research include international standards to fight cybercrime; comparative analysis of cybercrime legislation; self- and co-regulation in addressing cybersecurity issues; the changing role of the ICT Regulators in fighting cybercrime; and future challenges for the ICT regulations that emerge as a result of cybersecurity concerns. She has been invited to speak on her research topics at different international events, including NATO, ITU, and OSCE events, and at the Worldwide Cybersecurity Summit, EU Summer School on Internet Governance, among others. Email: t.tropina@mpicc.de

Annette von Schönfeld has been the Director of the Mexico, Central America, and Caribbean regional office of the Heinrich Böll Foundation since July 2012. Before that she worked as Head of the Latin America department at the Foundation in Berlin for six years. From 2004 to 2006 she was Director of the campaign “The Human Right to Water” at the Lutheran development agency Bread for the World, Germany.

Focusing on democracy, human rights, and urban development, she has been coordinating governmental and nongovernmental development projects in Brazil, Guatemala, Chile, and Nicaragua for more than 10 years. She holds a master’s degree in Communications from the Free University of Berlin. Email: Annette.vonSchoenfeld@mx.boell.org

Verena Zoppei is a PhD student at the law faculties of the University of Milan and Humboldt Universität zu Berlin. She has an LLM in Transnational Criminal Justice and Crime Prevention from the University of the Western Cape. Her major fields of research are anti-money laundering law, anti-corruption law, and economic crimes. She has worked for civil society organizations involved in the fight against the Mafia and corruption. Email: verena.zoppei@gmail.com