Numerous people, knowledges, chocolate bars, dance distractions, sci-fi books, and landscapes supported me in writing this book. On the human side, I first and foremost thank you, the makers, entrepreneurs, journalists, researchers, hustlers, and friends in Nairobi, for sharing your knowledge and time with me, so that I could process your experiences, thoughts, and critiques along academic rules and squeeze them into this book. I especially appreciate the tremendous support of Gaki Gichia, Joe Mathai, Abu Okari, Brenda Livoi, Paul Birkelo, and Bitange Ndemo – nawashukuru. Institutionally, I thank both of my supervisors – Marc Boeckler and Seyram Avle – for giving me valuable feedback. Marc, thank you for your financial support and empathy in even the most demanding circumstances of life. Seyram, thank you for your constructive and motivating energy. In addition, I am grateful for the intellectual input of the (former) scholars at the Department of Human Geography in Frankfurt, particularly the AG Boeckler, Lucas Pohl, Stefan Ouma, and Julia Verne. I thank the Hans Böckler Foundation (especially Gudrun Löhner) for granting me a scholarship in the first years of my PhD research.

Overall, this book is truly a result of female solidarity and synergy: my love and deep gratitude go to Christiane Tristl, the most wonderful symbiont, Klara-Aylin Wenten, my intellectual soulmate, Carlotta Giustozzi, my soothing spirit, Luisa Hoffmann, Mona Friedrich, Andrea Jiménez, Ivonne Felhauer, Christiane Kretschmer, Malve Jacobsen, Josefa Kny, Eleanor Marchant, Sigrid Rand, Lizzie Richardson, Gabriele Reichenbach, and Sue Redgrave (proof-reader). Thank you for your precious feedback, your inspiring thoughts, and structuring advice; without you, my research stays, writing retreats, and office hours would have been dismal and the book would only be half as gratifying as it is now. I am very grateful for my fellow PhD survivors Mona, Josy, Christiane, Carlotta, Malve, Luisa, and Klara, for sharing self-doubts, deadline delays, and other rollercoaster emotions, so that we became aware that our feelings are not individual, but affects structured by our varying precarities. Further, I would like to thank the academic and activist networks that have given me confidence in my (political) academic endeavor: Global Innovation Gathering, Zentrum Emanzipatorische Technikforschung, AK Feministische Geographien, and the Africa Tech Research Collective.

Last, but definitely not least, I thank my family and friends for always reminding me that life is not just academia, but about dance excesses, delicious greasy food, hiking in mountains, along cliffs and in forests, planting zucchinis, and laughing profusely. Jana, Stane, Moe, Ivi, Sonja, Johanna, Carli, Mona, Josy, Lü, Chrizzlon, Raoul, Stephanski, Felice, Lu, Klari, Malveroni, Elvira, Sarah, Chrystal, Alidi, Sabrina, Moira, Niki, Iris, Elena, Jolka, and Friedi – you are the best. My immeasurable thanks go to my family – Mama, Ivo, Oma, Heike, Sabine, Ruth (rest in peace), and Chris – you give me shelter whenever I need it. Meine Zuhauses sind dort wo ihr seid.
