

Acknowledgements

This book could not have been written without the people who volunteered to be interviewed for my PhD project. I cannot thank them enough for sharing their stories with me, and I am immensely grateful for their openness. My first thanks goes to them.

I also want to thank my supervisor Prof. Michi Knecht for her guidance, help and encouragement throughout this process. Her enthusiasm for anthropology is contagious, and her commitment to high-quality research and teaching has reminded me time and again that this truly is a fantastic discipline. Her input has had an immense impact on this book. My thanks also go to Prof. Jeanette Edwards for agreeing to be my second examiner. Her work has shaped my own ideas tremendously.

This study was conducted as part of the joint project Reconfiguring Anonymity of the University of Bremen, University of Hamburg, and the Leuphana University Lüneburg, funded by the program “Schlüsselthemen für Wissenschaft und Gesellschaft” (“Key Issues for Academia and Society”) of the Volkswagen Foundation (project number VW89490). I profited greatly from discussions and conversations with all participating scientists and artists, and I feel incredibly lucky to have had the chance to learn and work together with so many interesting and inspiring people. My special thanks goes to my fellow doctoral students Anna Henke and Randi Heinrichs. Together, we lived through the at times tumultuous experience of doing a PhD, which helped me to maintain my sanity.

During my time as a PhD student, the Department of Anthropology and Cultural Research at the University of Bremen was my academic home, and I would like to thank all of its current and former members of staff for including me in its supportive academic environment. I am especially grateful to my “PhD sibling” Laura Brachmann with whom I not only shared an office but also hopes, fears and a fair bit amount of laughter.

My stay at the Reproductive Sociology Research Group at the University of Cambridge during my time in the UK was an amazing academic and personal experience. I will always look back at my time in Cambridge with great fondness and nostalgia.

While I have always loved the excitement of moving and getting to experience life in different parts of the world, it has meant spending less time with the people who are near and dear to me. I may not have seen them as often as I would like to, but I am grateful for them being in my life. My sincerest thanks go to Sara Adhami, Katrin Amelang, Esra Atalay Tuna, Sven Bergmann, Hande Çakinel, Ulrike Flader, Martin Gruber, Çetin Güner, Katharina Kasprzyk, Christina Lieser, Nurhak Polat, Iris Rothäusler, Aidas Sanogo, Carina Selhammar and Meike Sontheim for their friendship, encouragement and help with my PhD thesis. I could not have asked for a better writing-retreat than the four weeks I spent with Bregda and Teubes Mostert on their farm in Koringberg, South Africa. I am forever grateful that I met them all these years ago, and I hope that there will be many more visits in the future.

Last, but certainly not least, I want to thank my family from my original home, especially my uncle Rainer Hitz, my brother Rainer Baumann and my mother Sabine Baumann for their support throughout my studies and the last years. Finally, I want to thank my grandmother Leni Hitz. I would not be writing these acknowledgements now without the benefit of her support. She has always trusted my decisions and was always there for me, and I deeply thank her for that.
