Having an idea and turning it into a students' research project and a book is not an easy task. The project started as a one-year student research laboratory that took place in Germany and Israel, an idea that was born during an ERASMUS Lecturer exchange and continues a 30-year partnership between the two institutions involved: PH – Ludwigsburg University of Education and Beit Berl College. The students worked together on various case studies, analyzing the ideological meanings embedded in cultural heritage and its political implications, while rethinking the model of “shared heritage” that has become popular in the West in recent years.

We want to thank the students from the M.A. program in the Institute for Cultural Management at Ludwigsburg University of Education, Germany, and the M.Ed. students in Art Education in the faculty of Arts – Hamidrasha at Beit Berl College, Israel, who helped make this happen. The project was led by Prof. Christiane Dätsch and Dr. Chava Brownfield-Stein who organized the students' study program and moderated and guided the research projects, with the assistance of Dr. Dalya Markovich.

Last but not least, the program and the edited volume would not exist without the generous support of the Baden-Württemberg-STIPENDIUM for University Students – BWS plus, and the help of Beit Berl College research center. We sincerely thank them for their support.
