

Contents

Acknowledgements 15

1. Introduction 17

1.1 Context and Significance 17

1.2 A Brief History of Television News in the Arab World 20

1.3 The Syrian Conflict as a Case Study 23

1.4 Structure of the Book 28

2. Theoretical Framework 33

2.1 Vulnerability, Resistance, and the Dependency on Infrastructure 33

2.2 Power and Different Modes of Violence 36

2.3 Defining Resilience in Neoliberal Times 40

2.4 Resistance, Agency, and the Non-liberatory Subject 43

3. Methodology 47

3.1 Perspective on Language and Discourse 47

3.2 A Critical Approach to Discourse Analysis 49

3.3 Units of Analysis 51

3.3.1 The Sample Selection 52

3.3.2 The Selection of Dominant Themes 55

3.3.3 The Analysis Process 57

3.4 Methodological Questions on Agency and Points of Reversibility 58

3.5 Methodological Reflections 59

4. Arab Television News Coverage of Former Female Syrian Prisoners in Exile: The Intersection of Shame, Violence, and Stigma 61

4.1 Introduction 61

4.2 Research Data 62

4.3	Analysis	64
4.3.1	Imprisonment, Sexual Assault, and Controlled Mobility	64
4.3.2	From Being Shamed to Being Silenced	69
4.4	Conclusion	76
5.	Rethinking the Relationship between Child Marriage and Failed Infrastructure during the Syrian Conflict	79
5.1	Introduction	79
5.2	Research Data	82
5.3	Analysis	84
5.3.1	Child Marriage	84
5.3.2	Failed Infrastructure	90
5.4	Conclusion	95
6.	Displaced Syrian Women at Work: Everyday Resilience and the Neoliberal Subject	97
6.1	Introduction	97
6.2	Research Data	99
6.3	Analysis	102
6.3.1	Talking to Good Resilient Subjects: Displaced Syrian Women Erasing the Past or Painting it through their Work	102
6.3.2	Training the Good Resilient Subject: A Survey of News Reports on Displaced Syrian Women Participating in Vocational and Cash-for-Work Programs and other blue-collar Jobs	107
6.4	The Notion of Resilience in a Humanitarian Discourse	117
6.5	Conclusion	121
7.	'Mothers of the Nation': The Ambivalent Role of Motherhood in Assad's Syria and the Non-liberatory Subject	123
7.1	Introduction	123
7.2	Research Data	126
7.3	Analysis	128
7.3.1	From Manly Fighters to Ornamented Flowers	128
7.3.2	Motherhood as a National Duty	133
7.3.3	Reflecting on other News Stories	141

7.4	Motherhood in Relation to Agency	143
7.5	Conclusion	150
8.	The Construction of Syrian Women in the Arab Television News	151
8.1	Normalizing Violence and Reaffirming Victimhood in the Television News	151
8.2	Humanitarian Reasoning and Personal Testimonies in the Television News	153
8.3	Questions on Agency and the Dynamics of Shame, Fear, and Dignity in the Arab Television News	159
9.	From Dominant Media Frames to Spaces of Appearance	165
9.1	Television Ownership: Biases and Blind Spots	165
9.2	The Dominant Media Frames and the Procedures of Media Reporting	167
9.3	The Mediated Figure of the Syrian Woman at the Forefront of Geopolitical Tensions	170
9.4	The Intersection of Media Logic, Gender Logic and War Logic in Television News Narratives	175
9.5	A Feminist Logic by Spaces of Appearance?	177
10.	Concluding Remarks	181
	Bibliography	187

*Dedicated to every woman who is grappling through life and refuses to kneel down.
Thank you for your strength, thank you for your resistance, but more importantly, thank you for embracing your vulnerability.*

“I am my mother’s daughter, which means on days when the world hurts, but I have things to do, I tell it to come back tomorrow.” – Maysan Nasser

