

Contents

1 Prologue: Architecture as a Discipline of Composition | 7

1.1 Acknowledgements | 16

2 Introduction: Topic, State of Knowledge, Method | 19

2.1 Ludwig Hilberseimer: Life and Work | 19

2.2 Scientific Recension of the Work Hilberseimer's | 23

2.2.1 Society follows Form: Society is predetermined by form | 25

2.2.2 Form follows Society: The form as product of social factors | 28

2.2.3 The Schemata of Design | 34

2.3 The method: A mereological reading | 34

2.3.1 The term form in philosophy and architecture | 35

2.3.2 The house and the city: a classic formal thesis | 38

2.3.3 An introduction to Mereology | 42

2.3.4 A mereological composition of a line | 47

3 The Large City: The will to elemental architecture | 61

3.1 Creation and development | 61

3.1.1 The Kunstwollen as frictional contrast | 62

3.1.2 The Dionysian and the Apollonian | 73

3.2 Groszstadt Architecture | 79

3.2.1 The abstraction as a discursive experiment | 81

3.2.2 The large city as an elemental task | 84

3.2.3 The Vertical-City as vertical composition | 87

3.3 Towards an Autonomous Architecture | 116

3.3.1 The definition of the smallest architectural element | 118

3.3.2 The city as a new compositional task | 119

4 The unfolding of a planning idea | 123

4.1 From Vertical-City to Flat-Building | 123

4.1.1 The Welfare City | 123

4.1.2 The Proposal to City-Building | 125

4.1.3 Flat buildings | 128

4.2 Flat-building and city space | 131

4.2.1 In the shadow of Mies | 141

4.3 Studies on room insolation | 143

4.4 Elements of City Planning | 148

5 The punctualisation as architectural method | 165

5.1 The concept of form in the work of Hilberseimer | 165

5.2 Punctualisation as method | 168

5.2.1 The punctualisation at Hilberseimer | 172

5.3 Room, House, Town, Region: a mereological analysis | 182

6 Conclusion: The Art of City-Planning | 209

Notes | 215

Prologue: Architecture as a Discipline of Composition | 215

Introduction: Topic, State of Knowledge, Method | 217

The Large City: The will to elemental architecture | 223

The unfolding of a planning idea | 229

The punctualisation as architectural method | 233

Conclusion: The Art of City-Planning | 237

List of Figures | 239

Bibliography | 247