1 Introduction: Intranet technologies 15
1.1 Just "a machine for doing business"? 17
1.2 The post-industrial economy: Cognitive-cultural capitalism and "immaterial labour" 20
1.3 Research questions and observations 24
1.4 Theories of practice in organisation research and Science & Technology Studies 26
1.5 A practice-theoretical understanding of mergers and organisational cultures 31
1.6 Empirical Case: The intranet in Telecompany-X 33
1.7 More than a machine for doing business 39
1.8 Chapter outline 43

2 Researching the Intranet in Telecompany-X: Methodological Considerations 49
2.1 Methodological rationale 50
2.2 Entering field sites: Initial interviews 52
2.3 Extending sites, aligning focus: Telecompany-X 57
2.3.1 Gaining access 58
2.3.2 Maintaining access 59
2.3.3 Two groups of employees 64
2.4 Generating field data: Opportunities and limitations 68
2.4.1 Company visits and 'guided tours' through the intranet 69
2.4.2 In there, but outside: Shifting research positions 72
2.5 Analysing field data: Crafting the research narrative 74

2.5.1 Selecting analytical themes from interviews with software developers and others 76
2.5.2 Identifying analytical topics from company visits and 'guided tours' through the intranet 78
2.5.3 Organising analytical themes and topics 81

3 Cultivating differences: Orientation and sensemaking in the post-merger company 85
3.1 Merger processes in research and literature: Corporate cultures and organisational control 89
3.2 Post-industrial management practices: Organisational identity work and regulation 90
3.3 Caught in difference: Orientation in the merging company 94
3.4 Making sense of the post-merger company: The discursive construction of (in-)distinctiveness 97
3.4.1 Upholding difference: "These were totally different worlds clashing" 97
3.4.2 Overlooking and downplaying difference, nurturing coherence: "That doesn't exist anymore, the division" 104
3.5 Integrating post-merger identity work 108

4 A "medium of Internal Communications" and an "employee-portal": The divided Intranet 115
4.1 The intranet's starting page and newsfeed 116
4.2 Branding the merger: Corporate and internal brand management in Telecompany-X 119
4.3 The intranet as a "medium of Internal Communications" 123
4.3.1 Beyond the intranet: Constructing the "Einfach Macher" 125
4.3.2 The intranet as 'integration' and 'change' agent 129
4.4 A "tool of purpose": The intranet as part of everyday work 131
4.4.1 Un-reading the newsfeed: "You would need time to read through it" 136
4.4.2 Hierarchising content and applications: "This is playing around" 139
4.4.3 Making fun of identification and team building efforts: "But we rarely watch TV, only at home" 143
4.5 A divided intranet that engages the 'many' users 147

5 "This has to be coordinated": Interacting with one another as part of 'mundane' knowledge work 153
5.1 Mediated communication as central characteristic of 'mundane' knowledge work 157
5.2 The corporate directory and the organigram 160
5.2.1 Identifying another colleague as part of the company 162
5.2.2 Departmental belonging as a 'knowledge device' for understanding email messages 164
5.2.3 Hierarchy as a coordinating principle in everyday interaction: "This is what it's all about!" 167
5.3 Mundane communication practices 171

6 Searching "our internal Google": Working around and towards the intranet 177
6.1 The notion of "Google" 178
6.2 'Matching' humans and technologies: Ideas in business communication and software programming 183
6.2.1 Acceptance and diffusion 184
6.2.2 Usability testing 185
6.3 The concept of the "workaround" 187
6.4 The search function 189
6.4.1 Saving links in the browser: "I would never search for [it]" 189
6.4.2 Office conversation and exchanging emails: "That's the Google effect" 192
6.4.3 Working towards the intranet: Differences between technicians and Customer Service 196
6.5 Keeping the workflow going: On the (dis-)integration of the intranet into existing work settings 199

7 Conclusion: More than a machine for doing business 205
7.1 The intranet: A 'multiple' technology by definition 208
7.2 The intranet as an ambiguous carrier of internal and corporate branding practices 209
7.3 The intranet as part of workable configurations in mundane knowledge work 212
7.4 Coming together while staying apart? The intranet as a 'cultural integrator' for (dis-)connected organisations 216
