

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements | 9

Introduction and Outline | 13

PART I: INTRODUCING ETHNOGRAPHY TO COASTAL NATURECULTURES

1. Working with Nature, Working with Water: A Globalized Imaginary | 23

2. Natureculture Imaginaries | 37

2.1 Making Multiple Natures | 37

2.2 “Working with Nature”: A Sociotechnical Imaginary | 48

3. The Context of the Coast | 57

3.1 Coastal Change and the Bi-Cultural Nation | 57

3.2 Designing the Field | 62

3.3 Para-Ethnographic Encounters and Para-Sites | 68

PART II: BEYOND HARD PROTECTION? THE WAIHI BEACH CASE

4. Historical Transect of a Coastal Protection Conflict | 81

4.1 “Have You Seen Waihi Beach?” | 81

4.2 Coastal Protection History on a Changing Coastline | 89

4.3 Who Owns the Beach? Defending the Local Coast | 97

4.4 Narrowing Down the Case: The Environment Court in Search of “The Scientific Viewpoint” on the Conflict | 112

5. Possible Futures | 125

5.1 Soft Options: “A Sob to the Greenies” | 125

5.2 Civil Disobedience Continued: The Council Change Petition | 137

5.3 “Things are Changing”: Tangata Whenua and the Cultural Pillar of Sustainability | 141

5.4 Dystopia Waihi Beach: Enrolling the Seawall’s Materiality into Future Coastal Policymaking | 148

PART III: MATERIAL PRACTICES OF WORKING WITH NATURE, OR: MAKING COASTAL NATURECULTURES

- 6. Restoring and Maintaining Nature:
An Introduction to Coast Care | 165
- 7. Working with Nature, Working with Communities | 177
 - 7.1 Keeping Busy: Senior Volunteers Doing Their Part | 178
 - 7.2 Volunteering as a Means of Working Towards Paid Work | 181
 - 7.3 Reclaiming the Public Space of the Beach:
The Anti-Encroachment Project | 184
 - 7.3.1 “I am Concerned About the Plants, not the Politics”:
Tensions Between Coast Care and Council Objectives | 188
 - 7.3.2 “Giving Something Back to the Community”:
More Unpaid Labour on the Beach | 190
 - 7.3.3 “I Hope Prince Harry is Gonna Shake my Hand”:
The Voluntourists | 195
 - 7.4 “It Makes You a Better Person”:
Suzanne, a “Great Kiwi Example” | 200
- 8. “It’s a Frontline of Defence” –
Dune Restoration as Soft Protection | 205
 - 8.1 Erosion is a Natural Process | 207
 - 8.2 Do-It-Yourself Erosion Control:
A “Kick Cowboy” Approach to Coast Care | 212
 - 8.3 Beyond Coast Care: Dune-Reshaping
as an Alternative to Hard Protection? | 218
 - 8.4 Changing Paradigms: Coast Care as a
“Soft Approach to Hard Issues” | 226
 - 8.5 Hibernating Through the Financial Crisis:
The Mōkau Spit Camping Ground Investment | 231
 - 8.6 Managing Coastal Naturecultures | 233
 - 8.7 Coast Care as Climate Change Adaptation? | 234
 - 8.8 “A Moving Target a Little Bit”:
Coastal Restoration from Foredune to Backdune | 238
- 9. Reconstructing Native Nature | 243
 - 9.1 Why Restore (Native) Nature? | 244
 - 9.2 Anthropological Perspectives on Native and Invasive Species | 247

- 9.3 Postcolonial Natures: A History of Aotearoa
New Zealand's Coastal Dunes | 255
- 9.4 Invasive Native Plants: Mangroves | 260
- 9.5 Naturally Native: A Sustainable Business | 261
- 9.6 Native Naturecultures | 269
- 9.7 Universal Nature and Local Crisis: Maketu Spit | 274
- 9.8 "Soft Is What We Can Do Ourselves": Natureculture Restoration
as Employment Project for Māori Youth | 281
- 9.9 Working with Native Natures | 286

10. Understanding Nature, Making Waves: Multipurpose Reefs | 287

- 10.1 The Dream of Artificial Surfing Breaks | 288
- 10.2 Towards Multifunctionality – A Soft Option? | 296
- 10.3 Working Economically: Artificial Reefs
as Coastal Development Projects | 301
- 10.4 The Future: Managed Advance? | 305

Conclusion: Working with Nature, Making Coastal Naturecultures | 311

Bibliography | 319

List of Interviews | 353

Table of Figures | 355

