

Acknowledgements

This volume is part of the results of a research project on ‘The negotiation of law in the peripheries of southern Ethiopia’. It was funded by the German Research Foundation (DFG) and hosted at the Frobenius Institute at the Goethe University in Frankfurt/Main. Susanne Epple – a social anthropologist – was the principal investigator of the project and did her own research in the very south of Ethiopia. In order to widen the scope of the research and get an interdisciplinary perspective, she invited Getachew Assefa – a lawyer and expert on constitutional law and legal pluralism in Ethiopia – to cooperate. Together they organized two interdisciplinary events: an international conference organized at Jinka University (JKU) in Jinka, southern Ethiopia in January 2018, and a panel at the 20th International Conference of Ethiopian Studies (ICES) at Mekelle University, northern Ethiopia in October 2018. Both were titled ‘Legal pluralism in Ethiopia: The interplay of international, national and customary law’. Most of the papers in this volume are results of these events; some joined the group at a later stage.

We are grateful to the German Research Foundation (DFG) for the generous funding of the project, the conference and panel, and most of the publication costs. We would also like to take the opportunity to thank the staff at Jinka University for their great support in making the conference in Jinka possible, and express our gratitude to the organizers of the ICES 20 in Mekelle.

We are also indebted to the Frobenius Institute, which hosted the project from 2016–2019. The institute has a long history of research and has shown continued interest in the ethnic diversity and cultural complexity of Ethiopia. Since its expeditions into Ethiopia in the early twentieth century, numerous well-known publications have come out of the institute, by authors such as Adolf E. Jensen, Eike Haberland, Helmut Straube, Werner Lange, Elisabeth Pauli and Ulrich Braukämper, to mention only a few.¹ Professor Karl-Heinz Kohl, the then director of the Frobenius Institute, offered to host the project in 2016. We would like to thank him,

1 For an overview of the engagement of the Frobenius Institute in Ethiopia see Dinslage, Sabine and Sophia Thubauville (eds.), 2017 Seeking out wise old men: Six decades of Ethiopian studies at the Frobenius Institute. Berlin: Reimer and the current director, Professor Roland Hardenberg, as well as the staff of the Frobenius Institute for their welcoming and indefatigable cooperation, and also for co-financing the publication of the book. Special thanks go to Sophia Thubauville, a colleague at the Frobenius Institute and a co-researcher in Ethiopia, who has been very helpful throughout in many different ways.

To address the complexity of customary law and legal pluralism in contemporary Ethiopia from an interdisciplinary perspective, the editors invited experienced scholars from both of their disciplines – social anthropology and law – to contribute. We wish to thank all the authors for their great efforts and the patience they have shown in the course of publishing this volume.

Finally, we are grateful to the many informants in the field, both private people and government officials. Through their trust and openness to discuss partly very sensitive topics they have given us an insight into the problematic and conflicting aspects of their lives.

Last but not least we would like to thank Kay Celtel for her fast and professional copy-editing.