

---

Contents

|          |                                                                                                    |    |
|----------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
|          | Preface                                                                                     | 7  |
| 1 | The need to recouple the humanities and social sciences with society                        | 11 |
|          | Reorienting the humanities and social sciences                                              | 14 |
| 2 | The unique knowledge position of the humanities and social sciences                         | 15 |
| 3 | The methods of the humanities and social sciences                                           | 19 |
|          | Broad concept of humanities and social sciences                                             | 19 |
|          | Need for value-laden approaches                                                             | 23 |
|          | Pluralism of methods and approaches                                                         | 25 |
|          | Decentring and multi-perspectivity                                                          | 26 |
|          | Universalism as universalization                                                            | 28 |
|          | Revitalizing hermeneutics                                                                   | 28 |
|          | Moral realism                                                                               | 30 |
|          | Moral constitutivism                                                                        | 32 |
|          | Phenomenology                                                                               | 35 |
|          | Narratives and values                                                                       | 36 |
|          | Law and legal critique                                                                      | 41 |
| 4 | The humanities and social sciences will only succeed if they pursue an integrative approach | 42 |
| 5 | Reconfiguring institutions – Towards a culture of creativity                                | 46 |
| 6 | Towards a New Enlightenment                                                                 | 50 |
|          | Key principles                                                                              | 50 |
|          | Key challenges                                                                              | 52 |
|          | Open questions guiding the way forward                                                      | 53 |

|          |                                           |    |
|----------|-------------------------------------------|----|
| 7 | Suggestions for the way ahead      | 57 |
|          | Coping with complexity             | 58 |
|          | Welcoming otherness                | 59 |
|          | Ecologizing systemically           | 59 |
|          | Reconfiguring public health        | 60 |
|          | Reconciling technology and culture | 61 |
|          | Summary                            | 62 |
|          | Notes                              | 64 |
|          | References                         | 67 |
|          | About the authors                  | 76 |