In the Czech Republic, new political regions were introduced in the year 2000. This study sets out to inquire into the effects of regionalisation on organised civil society. The analysis is designed as a comparative case study focusing on two regions and two policies, namely tourism policy and social policy, which have been partially devolved to the meso-level. By developing a new instrument for analysis and based on a qualitative research method, the study provides a new insight into civil societal action and the way in which civil society is organized.

What do the division between the Orthodox Churches in Ukraine and the current Russian-Ukrainian crisis have in common? Analysing the relevant official documents of the Ukrainian Greek-Catholic Church on reconciliation, the author traces how this Church comes to terms with the burdened pages of Ukrainian history and their repercussions for the current struggling of Ukraine on the way to democratisation.

The book constitutes an original research in which the reconciliation discourse of the Ukrainian Greek-Catholic Church is analysed in a comprehensive way and brought into conversation with the theologies of Miroslav Volf, Robert Schreiter, and John Paul Lederach for the first time.
