PREFACE AND ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

THE IDEA BEHIND offering a volume of English translations is to encourage more people who do not have Faroese as a native language to learn about the literature, language, and culture of the Faroe Islands. It is hoped that the English translation and notes will be helpful aids in engaging with the original sources. It should also be said that the selection of ballads here (those about the hero Sjúrdur, known in Old Norse as Sigurðr Fáfnisbani) should not be perceived as being the best, most sung, or more valued on the Faroes by those participating in the still-living ballad tradition. Indeed, they have been selected because they are amongst those best known abroad and are comparable to material found in the Old Norse world. We therefore hope that the selection will be of particular interest to those working in Nordic, medieval, and Old Norse studies and those interested in Faroese ballads in general.

We would like to thank Universitets-Jubilæets danske Samfund for permission to reproduce the Faroese text of the ballads from volume one of Føroya kvæði: Corpus Carminum Færoensium, published by Einar Munksgaard in Copenhagen in 1951.

We acknowledge the support of the Centre for Advanced Study (CAS) in Oslo, Norway, which funded and hosted the Young CAS research project Ballads Across Borders: The Faroe Islands in the Norse Story-Telling World during the 2021–2023 academic years, led by Helen F. Leslie-Jacobsen. The generous funding from CAS has made the open access publication of this volume possible. The participants of this project also workshopped the translations of the first three ballads in this book, and we are very grateful for their corrections and comments. We are also grateful to Saskia Cowan for her participation in the second phase of the project in 2024.

We would also like to thank the members of the Research Group for Medieval Philology at the University of Bergen who gave feedback on the introduction, and to fagutvalget i norrøn filologi (the official student group for Old Norse philology at the University of Bergen) for their enthusiasm for the project. Annika Christensen deserves thanks for her feedback on the introduction, copyediting, and for tackling the layout of the ballads into two columns. Fredrik Charpentier Ljungqvist also deserves thanks for help with formatting. Ambra Ventura deserves thanks for correcting the digital edition of the Faroese text against the printed edition. We would like to thank Julia Skinner, Jens Eike Schnall, David Carrillo-Rangel, Signe Nilssen, and Anna Bohlin for their long-term support for the project. We would also like to thank the team at Arc Humanities Press, especially Anna Henderson, Tania Colwell, and Emily Morgan Harless. All remaining errors are unfortunately our own.

BALLADS ON THE FAROE ISLANDS

HELEN F. LESLIE-JACOBSEN

THE FAROE ISLANDS are a small archipelago country in the North Atlantic Ocean with a truly unique story-telling heritage; this introduction and volume of translations explores how this community preserved and transmitted some of the most exciting and enduring stories from Germanic legend. To say “preserved and transmitted” in the past tense is perhaps not completely correct, because the Faroese ballad tradition is still living. The ballads are a key element of the vibrant Faroese folk tradition and the ballads presented in this volume, although they have their roots in the Middle Ages, are still sung and danced in the Faroe Islands to this day.¹ The goal of this volume is simple: to introduce the Faroese ballads preserving material from the Völsung legend to a wider audience and to make them accessible to students, scholars, and those generally interested. Ballads on the Faroe Islands have been collected, written in manuscripts, recorded, and published in print. This introductory essay gives an overview of how this happened, how ballads are present in contemporary Faroese culture, and the characteristics of the Faroese ballad tradition.

The Norse settled on the Faroe Islands permanently in the ninth century, bringing with them their language, culture, and storytelling traditions, which from the Middle Ages were transmitted in the Faroe Islands in ballad form.² Faroese ballads are dance narratives, often very lengthy and accompanied by a distinctive ring dance.³ The Faroese language is descended from Old West Norse, but unlike the Old Norse culture in Iceland, the Faroe Islands did not have a written literary culture in the Middle Ages and early modern period.⁴ Danish was the official language of the islands and written Faro-

4 From the time of settlement to the late twelfth century, the Faroe Islands were a separate legal entity. They were subject to the Norwegian crown by the 1180s and entered the Kalmar Union in the late fourteenth century as a Norwegian territory. At ese was not countenanced; nevertheless, the native population developed a rich oral tradition consisting of ballads and folk tales, which helped to preserve the Faroese language in the face of Danish domination. Faroese finally became an official language of the Faroe Islands in 1948 in the Home Rule Act of the Faroe Islands.⁵ Prior to this, during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, a great period of ballad collecting began on the Faroe Islands, and at this time the ballads were recorded in manuscripts.⁶

Before discussing what is characteristic of the Faroese ballads, we might ask what exactly is a ballad? A ballad is “a learned term for anonymous, Western European epic folk-poetry in oral tradition with couplets or quatrains followed by a refrain.” The ballads presented in this volume are more specifically heroic ballads: “folk-ballads in ballad stanza form which tell of champions in the past, often in faraway places, and of their excellent (or villainous) deeds.”⁷

Situated in the middle of the west Norse area, the Faroe Islands were far from being culturally isolated and were an integral part of the Germanic storytelling tradition in the Middle Ages and beyond, sharing legendary narrative motifs and content with the general heroic Germanic story-telling tradition in an area that extends from the Nordic countries (Iceland, Faroe Islands, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark) to the British Isles in the west and south to Germany. This can be referred to collectively as medieval Germanic legend—legend that goes across the borders of a single national literature.⁸ This material speaks to the close connections between communities across this large area during the entirety of the pre-modern era. In the Faroe Islands, the heroic material took the form of ballads (long dance narratives), preserved in oral tradition and accompanied by a distinctive ring dance.

This volume focuses on the Faroese ballads that tell the story of the figure known in Old Norse-Icelandic as Sigurðr Fáfnisbani. That this medieval legend was found on the Faroe Islands is no surprise: the legend of Sigurd the end of the Kalmar Union in the sixteenth century, Norway (and thus the Faroe Islands) entered a union with Denmark. The Dano-Norwegian union lasted until 1814, when Norway was ceded to Sweden. However, this did not include the Faroe Islands, Iceland, and Greenland, which remained part of Denmark. The Faroe Islands are still part of the Kingdom of Denmark.

the Dragon-Slayer was popular all over the medieval north, in an area that included the Faroe Islands, Iceland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, the British Isles and which stretched down to central Europe in what is now Germany. The story includes several other pre-eminent heroic figures of the Middle Ages, such as Helgi Hundingsbani, Gunnar (Old Norse Gunnarr, a historical king of Burgundy), focuses on the youth, marriage, and death of Sjúrdur Fávnisbani (Old Norse Sigurðr Fáfnisbani), his lover Brynhild Buðladóttir (Old Norse Brynhildr Buðladóttir), Sjúrdur's slaying of the dragon Fáfnir/Frænar (Old Norse Fáfnir), and associated legendary events concerning the Nibelung royal house and their treasure.

Characteristics of the Faroese Ballads

In contrast to most other medieval ballad traditions that we know of, Faroese ballads (kvæði) are specially marked out by their great length.⁹ It is not uncommon for a ballad to have over one hundred stanzas; indeed, the variants of Brynhildar tåttur often have around 250 stanzas.¹⁰ This means that each ballad can take several hours to a whole evening to perform. Performance is also a key element when considering the Faroese ballad tradition; these ballads were not simply chanted but rather danced; indeed, one verb denoting performance of ballads is at dansa (to dance), where it is understood that you would also be singing, while at kvøða (to chant, sing) explicitly means to chant or sing the ballads.¹¹

Since heroic Faroese ballads can be so long, they often have several sections known as tættir (sg. tåttur), and each section can function as a stand-alone ballad and be chanted independently. This is the case with the Sjúrdar kvæði, which is divided into three tættir (Regin smiður, Brynhildar tåttur, and Høgna tåttur). The origin of this construction would seem to be medi-

9 There are two types of ballads, kvæði and tættir (also the word used to refer to ballad sections). Kvæði are the long heroic ballads, of which the Sjúrdar kvæði is an example. Tættir are performed in the same way but are shorter and deal with local affairs rather than the epic concerns of the kvæði. For more on the difference between kvæði and tættir, see Christensen, “Kvæði í froyrskari samtíð,” 14–16. For more on tættir, see Galvin, “The Many Faces of Satiric Ballads.”

10 Stanzas are usually two or four lines, but sometimes more (five, six, seven, nine, or ten). See Dahl, Bókmentasøga I, 23, also for rhyme schemes.

11 Cf. Christensen, who writes “The term kvøða/kvøðing is used to denote the way the ballad is performed vocally, which is a combination of singing and chanting, as opposed to the Faroese word syngja, which refers to singing.” Christensen, “Kvæði í froyrskari samtíð,” 6.

eval and is comparable with medieval English ballads being divided into fyttes, although Mortan Nolsøe suggests that the origin of the structure in the Faroese ballads likely stems from Norwegian heroic ballads of the late Middle Ages.¹²

Historically on the Faroe Islands singing such ballads, folk songs, and spiritual songs would have been a major source of entertainment:

Winter days were short and the evening long—and if you needed entertainment, there was nowhere to go! The family and other members of the household gathered in the smoke-room (roykstova), i.e. the room where there was a fireplace, but with only a hole in the roof to let in light and let out the smoke. There was lots of work in a Faroese household: fishing tackle and other tools needed repairing; wool had to be carded and spun; there was knitting to be done, etc. etc. There were ample opportunity to tell stories and not least to sing, whether kvæði, folk songs or spiritual songs. These kvøldsetur (“evening gatherings”) were of great importance to the oral transmission of legends and songs.¹³

The Faroese folklorist Mortan Nolsøe points out that chanting ballads at home (without the dance) was vital for the oral transmission and learning of folk ballads,¹⁴ and this was known as sitandi kvøðing (seated song). As this quotation also illustrates, ballads were not the only source of songs for Faroe Islanders, nor were they only in Faroese, since songs were also introduced from elsewhere, ballads sung in Danish being particularly popular. Faroese ballads are known in Faroese as kvæði, while those ballads referred to as a vísa are typically those sung in Danish.

The Dance and Melodies

Faroese folk songs and their melodies have been passed down in oral tradition; these encompass kvæði, Danish folk songs (vísur), spiritual songs, and Kingo singing.¹⁵ Unlike many European ballad traditions, the ballads are unaccompanied song. There were no instruments on the Faroe Islands until around 1900 and no knowledge of notes.¹⁶ Each village would have had a slightly different melody tradition from the next, although not so different that people from different villages could not sing ballads together.¹⁷ Each singer, too, can shape the melody according to the circumstances.¹⁸ There are various melodies recorded for the ballads, these have been transcribed and published by Marianne Clausen.¹⁹ The database of melodies is available online.²⁰ Unlike the texts of the ballads which have entered print, the melodies of the ballads are still almost always passed on in oral tradition.²¹ Although when villages were more isolated they had individual melodies for the ballads, it should be mentioned that with the advent of dancing societies in the Faroe Islands (the first society was established in the 1950s), and easily available recordings of ballads, a lot of the melodies have become more standardized.²²

One thing that distinguishes the Faroese ballads is that they are chanted to a dance.²³ The dance that accompanies the ballad singing is a chain/ring dance and is inseparable from the lyrics of the ballad in Faroese tradition.²⁴ This style of dancing is known to date back to the Middle Ages, and the Faroese variant is agreed on by scholars to be medieval in origin, although it is important to point out that both the dance and its cultural significance have changed through time.²⁵ When the ballads are danced, the leader of the sing-

23 Mortan Nolsøe comments that they are not always danced, but when they are not, they are still chanted as if they were being danced. Nolsøe, “Faroese Balladry,” 17. The metre of the ballad and the dance go hand in hand. See Christensen, “Kvæði í føyroyskari samtíð,” 19–20; Galbraith, “Meter, Prosody and Performance”; Clausen, “Melodies to Faroese Kvæði.” For dancing and other medieval ballad traditions in Scandinavia, see Colbert, The Birth of the Ballad, 127–31.

24 This is the normal dance on the Faroes. There were also dancing games (dansispøl), which more or less died out around 1900 but have been revived by dancing societies. Clausen, “Melodies to Faroese Kvæði,” 59. See especially Andrea Opielka for studies of dancing games: Opielka, “Tanzspiele”; Opielka, Danse- og sanglege på Færøerne.

ing or chanting is known as the skipari (pl. skiparar, which literally means “the person in charge”).²⁶ The skipari (or kvøðari, meaning the ballad chanter or singer) starts each stanza then the rest of the dancers join in, while the refrain, sung after each stanza, is sung in unison. Historically mostly men led ballads, especially longer ballads, although women could lead shorter ballads. Today women lead almost equally to men.²⁷ The dance steps are simple: the dancers typically join hands in a chain, taking two steps left and one step right, and repeating this throughout the ballad.²⁸ Since there are so many ballads in the repertoire, the same ballad will rarely be performed more than once in a season in the dancing societies.²⁹ When ballads were danced at home, this was still the custom, since it was thought the ballad may become hackneyed if everyone knew it, and it was also possible for a particular skipari to be strongly associated with a particular ballad, and only he knew it and sang it.³⁰

The traditional dancing season is from Christmas to Shrovetide. However, in modern dancing associations, the normal dancing season is from October to Shrovetide.³¹ It is not only ballads in Faroese that were chanted to the dance. Danish folk songs and ballads, as well as newer Danish and Faroese ballads, were also used for dances, plus at Shrovetide and weddings spiritual songs were also danced.³² Faroese and Danish counting rhymes

26 For more on the skipari, see Clausen, “Melodies to Faroese Kvæði,” 75; Opielka, “At få dansen under foden.”

27 Marnersdóttir, “Women and Ballads,” 29.

28 The dancing is started on the left foot. See Christensen, ““Kvæði í føroyskari samtíð,”” 20. There is another dance style, known as trokingarstev (Clausen gives the example of it being danced in Sumba), where dancers remained stationary, perhaps dancing on the spot, for the verses and only moving as described during the refrain. Clausen, “Melodies to Faroese Kvæði,” 61; Hammershaimb, Færøsk anthology, vol. 1, pp. xlii–xliii. Hammershaimb also mentions bandadansur, where the men and women face each other in two lines, with a band between them, dancing stationary during the verses but during the refrain lifting the band into an arch that the other dancers then dance through. Hammershaimb, Færøsk anthology, vol. 1, p. xliii.

were also performed, such as the Faroese Mær gav sankta Mortan (St. Martin gave to me), which lists twenty Christmas presents.³³

Style

Faroese ballads have similarities with other medieval ballad traditions when it comes to their style. The “leaping and lingering” in the narrative is commonplace; that is, some aspects of the story are brushed over while other elements retain narrative focus for multiple verses. In the Faroese material, this is also marked by the repetition of certain lines in the section, or by employing very similar constructions that might switch out one word or so, for example, these five stanzas from Regin smiður about Sjúrdur growing up:

- | | |
| (36) So var tað við Sjúrða, mikil gav hann vekst,
meiri vaks hann í ein mánað,
enn onnur børn í seks. | So was it with Sjúrdur,
that he grew such a lot,
he grew more in one month,
than other children in six. |
| (37) Hann vaks upp hjá síni móður,
tað er einki hól,
meiri vaks hann í ein mánað,
enn onnur børn í tólv. | He grew up with his mother,
it's no exaggeration,
he grew more in one month,
than other children in twelve. |
| (38) Hann vaks upp hjá síni móður,
hon gav honum gangin hægst,
hann royndi meira í ein mánað
enn onnur børn í seks. | He grew up with his mother, she gave him the best upbringing,
he achieved more in one month
than other children in six. |
| (39) Hann vaks upp hjá síni móður,
miklan fekk hann alva,
styrknaði meiri í ein mánað
enn onnur børn í tólv. | He grew up with his mother,
he got such great strength,
he got stronger in one month
than other children in twelve. |
| (40) Hann vaks upp hjá síni móður,
lukkan honum góð,
hann vann meira í ein mánað
enn onnur børn í tólv. | He grew up with his mother, his luck was good,
he achieved more in one month
than other children in twelve. |

The ballads also employ refrains, and ballads on similar topics may employ the same refrain; for example, the Sjúrðar kvæði all have the same, well-known refrain:

33 Clausen, Andlig vísuløg í Føroyum, 51. Clausen writes that such counting rhymes were widespread in Europe and are therefore in Faroese oral tradition.

Grani bar gullið av heiði, brá hann sínum brandi av reiði, Sjúrður vann av orminum, Grani bar gullið av heiði.	Grani carried the gold from the heath, he brandished his blade in a fury, Sjúrður defeated the dragon, Grani carried the gold from the heath.
---	--

Since the ballads were transmitted in oral tradition, there are many variants of each ballad, which means there are different versions of what is recognisably the same ballad. This variation also occurs in the melodies and refrains, so while the refrain to the Sjúrðar kvæði will look the same, it is clear from Clausen's edition of melodies that there is minor variation within the refrain. Indeed, there are many variants of old refrains and some are impossible to make sense of, and some, unlike the obvious connection of the refrain of the Sjúrðar kvæði to the stories they tell, bear no relation to the content of the ballad.³⁴ The refrain is usually repeated between stanzas, however, there is a form called tvíflættað in which the lines of the refrain come in between the lines of the stanza.³⁵ The refrain is not important to the plot of the story, rather it continues the dance and gives the skipari breathing room—not only to catch his breath, but also to ready himself mentally for the next verse.³⁶

The Medieval Origins of Faroese Ballads

It is scholarly consensus that the Faroese ballads have medieval, oral origins; 191 Faroese ballads have been identified in previous research as being of medieval origin.³⁷ J. H. Schrøter (1771–1851), a Faroese priest, sent P. E. Müller a list of ballads that were thought to be over one hundred years old, and it was published in Müller's introduction to Lyngbye's Færøiske Qvæder.³⁸ It has been assumed in scholarship that the productive period of Faroese ballads was in the thirteenth or fourteenth to fifteenth centuries, before entering a period of decline. This can be compared to, and is likely influenced by, the traditional view of Icelandic saga production, which supposedly went into decline around 1300 due to the loss of Icelandic independence, thus connecting the value of literary production to political developments. The view of ballads entering a period of decline should thus be met with scepticism, since this view seems to be connected to the Faroe Islands losing independence to Norway and then Norway (and thus the Faroe Islands) uniting with Denmark at the dissolution of the Kalmar Union at the end of the fourteenth century, rather than any evidence from the ballad corpus itself. Indeed, since we have no records of Faroese ballads from the period in question, there is no evidence at all for a period of decline.³⁹ As discussed below, the tradition continues to the present day. The Faroese ballads of presumed medieval origin should be treated as the product of an oral culture that would not have come into being without oral transmission and, as such, they should be read as oral poems.

The ballad as an oral poem is in line with how a “medieval” ballad is defined in the introduction to The Types of the Scandinavian Medieval Ballad (TSB). This points to a lack of transcriptions from the actual Middle Ages and our reliance on typology and post-medieval sources that have been orally transmitted to compile what we consider to be medieval ballads, although there is a clear indication of change through time.⁴⁰ Medieval ballads have also been defined from a stylistic point of view by David Colbert, who lists, firstly, “a strophic, monodic melody and its verbal complement, a strophic text,” secondly, “a traditional song... transmitted orally and characterized by variation,” thirdly, “a folksong... without known author or authorized original version,” fourth, “with narrative content related from an objective point of view,” and fifth, “characterized by a limited range of stanzaic forms, and by a formulaic diction and narrative technique (the narrative formulas).”⁴¹ These stylistic aspects also cause us to consider the medieval origins of the Faroese ballad texts, even though they were recorded in post-medieval times.⁴²

The medieval origins of the Sjúrdar kvæði have recently been restated by Eyðun Andreassen, and those conclusions represent the scholarly consensus against an argument put forward by Peter Hvilshøj Andersen-Vinlandicus, who states that the Sjúrðar kvæði are not medieval.⁴³ Due to their heroic content, longevity and interconnectedness with other material from the Germanic area, the medieval origins of the material they present seem clear, but it is true that the relative age of the medieval ballads is difficult to pin down.

Faroese Ballads in the Early Modern Period Onwards

Faroese ballads have suffered from the same discourse of decline from a late medieval peak that was once popular with reference to Old Icelandic sagas: after the period in which the Faroese ballads were produced in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, the ballad tradition went into decline in the early modern period before the ballads were collected in the eighteenth century.⁴⁴ However, it is likely that in the early modern period creativity in ballad composition (or recomposition) may simply have taken a different shape. The Faroese ballad tradition is complex and long and was a continuing, creative tradition rather than the victim of post-medieval decline.

Although the Faroese ballads were in oral rather than written tradition in the medieval and early modern periods, Danish print books of ballads were certainly in circulation in the early modern period and influenced the native ballad tradition.⁴⁵ There are, for example, signs in the corpus that print culture in the form of imported ballads may have impacted the form of the Faroese ballads. The heroic ballads composed in couplet form likely reflect the influence of the ballads contained in Anders Sørensen Vedel's Hundredvisebogen (1591) and Peder Syv's republishing of this work in 1695 (to which he had added one hundred more), which were widely performed on the Faroe Islands.⁴⁶ Conroy briefly touches on the difficulties in detecting younger ballads in what is generally termed the medieval corpus and notes that attempts to list features that help determine a relative chronology have been unsuccessful.⁴⁷ The role of these Danish ballad books in forming the later life of Faroese ballad tradition in the early modern period is, however, little understood, although it is clear that since some Danish ballads acquired

Faroese melodies that they were important in the multimodal tradition, as demonstrated by Marianne Clausen; Clausen has also demonstrated that the Danish ballads formed an integral part of ballad life on the Faroes.⁴⁸

The earliest collections of the ballads in the Faroe Islands were undertaken in the time of Peder Syv, since a small number of sample texts were sent to the Danish scholar Ole Worm in 1639 by the priest Hans Rasmusen.⁴⁹ Although these were lost in a fire in 1728, a copy taken by Peder Syv shows that they included “Koralds kvæði,” “Torsteins kvæði,” “Hermundur Illi,” “Samsons kvæði,” and “Berrings vísa.”⁵⁰ In the eighteenth century, the popularity of the imported printed ballads may have encouraged original ballad compositions in the Faroes; there are several ballads from the eighteenth century with known poets (the later ballads deemed to be of post-medieval composition are numbered CCF 192–236).⁵¹ These later ballads include, for example, poems that have been performed to the ring dance, those that have been composed based on historical sources, and satirical ballads about various Faroe Islanders, known as tættir, while in the early nineteenth century, satirical ballads tended to have political themes.⁵²

We usually count many of the heroic Faroese ballads as being medieval, although they did not start to be written down until the eighteenth century by the Faroe Islander Jens Christian Svabo (1746–1824) in 1781 to 1782.⁵³ Svabo initiated a great period of ballad collecting on the Faroes. Two important figures in the nineteenth century were J. H. Schrøter (1771–1851), who collected on Suðuroy, and V. U. Hammershaimb, who collected primarily in 1847–1848.⁵⁴ Many ballad collections take the name of the island on which the texts were collected.⁵⁵ The largest of these collections is Sandoyarbók from 1821–1831, by Johannes Clementsen of Sandur, published in two volumes edited by Rikard Long.⁵⁶ Later collectors of importance include Jakob Jakobsen (1864–1918), who was collecting around 1900, Jóannes Patursson (1866–1946), who collected in between the wars and who published ballad books in 1922–1945 for the use of dancers, and Mortan Nolsøe (1924–1987), who was central in collecting Faroese ballad audio recordings in the twentieth century (active ca. 1960–1985), collecting approximately 336 ballads—more than any other individual.⁵⁷ The earliest ballad collectors wrote the ballads down phonetically since there was no standardized written Faroese language. The ballads were written down by collectors from singers known as informants, which in CCF are two-thirds men and one-third women.⁵⁸

Faroese ballads existed for centuries in oral tradition before being written down. The late recording of Faroese oral literature should likely be seen in connection with the predominance of Danish in the official life of the Faroes. Danish was the language of the church, school, and authorities and until the nineteenth century, and no printed books in Faroese existed. Indeed, the oral ballad tradition was crucial in ensuring Faroese remained as a language in use.⁵⁹ It was usual that people were not able to write in Faroese, although, in the twentieth century, the use of Faroese gradually gained acceptance by the Danish authorities. In 1912, a law passed allowing

Faroese as a written language to be taught in schools, and while the Bible in Faroese was first published in 1949, there was a hymnbook authorized in 1956 (published 1960), followed by an authorized version of the Bible in 1961.⁶⁰ Written Faroese is young.⁶¹

The ballads were not published until 1822, when H. C. Lyngbye published Færøiske Qvæder om Sigurd Fofnersbane og hans Æt, which was also the first book in Faroese.⁶² Although Lyngbye also collected ballads, this book is partly published on the basis of Schrøter's collecting, and the manuscript it is based on was published in a critical edition by Matras in 1951.⁶³ Next came Hammershaimb's two volume Færøiske Kvæder (1851–1855). The first of these volumes is devoted to a Faroese edition of the ballads about Sjúrdur, the same ballads translated in this book.⁶⁴ Hammershaimb was in contact with the Dane Svend Grundtvig, who was at the time preparing Danmarks gamle Folkeviser—the published Danish ballad corpus—and Grundtvig encouraged Hammershaimb to collect more Faroese ballads.⁶⁵ Grundtvig then later cooperated with Jørgen Bloch (his brother-in-law) and compiled all the Faroese folk ballads into the large manuscript Føroya kvæði (Corpus Carminum Færoensium), which by 1905 ended up as sixteen volumes and two supplements.⁶⁶ This collection was printed as six volumes of ballads text from 1941–1972, while volume seven, History, Manuscripts, Indexes, was published in 1996 by Chesnutt and Larsen, and volume eight in 2003 by Marianne Clausen, containing the melodies for the whole collection.⁶⁷ There are 236 ballads in the six volumes of Føroya kvæði and an additional twenty-six in Clausen's 2003 volume of melodies.⁶⁸ However, there are far more ballads present in the Faroese tradition than that, since the tradition also includes ballads in foreign languages, especially Danish.⁶⁹ It is also important to note that printed editions of the ballads (especially the early ones) were not widely owned, and therefore, even though printed ballads existed, they were still learnt and transmitted through oral tradition.⁷⁰

Faroese Ballads Today

There is regular discussion about the ballads as cultural heritage on the Faroe Islands today, but all generations have looked back to the good old days. In the afterword to Sandoyarbók (Copenhagen, Dansk Folkemindesamling, DFS 68), written in 1831, one reason Jóannes í Króki gives for collecting is that “the ballads have nearly gone out of use nowadays and the young people prefer new songs. I wanted coming generations of young people to know what their predecessors had in the way of entertainment at their Christmas dancing.”⁷¹ However, in 1854, V. U. Hammershaimb wrote that the ballads were still being composed by Faroese farmers, in “clean” language.⁷² Although Jóannes did us a great service in collecting the ballads that form the manuscript Sandoyarbók, he need not have worried, since today, the ballad tradition is still living. Brynhild Kamban writes that “kvæði eru sungnar søgur og gott undirhald, og kvøðing og dansur eru framvegis ein livandi partur av føroyskari mentan” (The ballads are sung stories and good entertainment, and chanting ballads and dancing is still a living part of Faroese culture).⁷³ The importance of the ballad tradition to contemporary Faroese society has been analysed in detail most recently by Annika Christensen. Her thesis argues that “if the ballads are to continue to be a dynamic part of Faroese lived experience, it is crucial that a continuous engagement with 68 Further ballads were collected in the twentieth century (not in CCF but listed as EYL in Clausen, Løgini / Melodies, 502–97). Versions of ballads have been recorded right into the twenty-first century. A version of Vermunds kvæði was recorded in 2001. See Clausen, Løgini / Melodies, 584.

the ballads has to be supported by different means. This includes funding, research, and allowing the ballads to be repurposed and reimaged in Faroese culture.” She also points out that ballads are seen as “an important contributing factor to the ways Faroese people socialise, celebrate and understand themselves.”⁷⁴

In the twentieth and twenty-first centuries, ballad performances take place in dancing halls organized by dancing associations; they are read and performed in schools and also more generally at other celebrations such as Christmas, New Year, Ólavsøka (the Wake of St. Olav, the Faroese national day), weddings, and other occasions.⁷⁵ Ballads, including the tradition, the singing, and the dancing, are a compulsory subject in both primary and secondary schools. The dancing associations also organize separate events for children to learn ballads and dance.⁷⁶ The first dancing society was formed in the 1950s, and all associations are a member of the central organization Slái Ring (established 1978), which distributes government funding and is a central organizing point.⁷⁷ Christensen pinpoints the importance of the dancing societies as “communal structures that facilitate the ballads as intangible heritage to survive, and potentially, to flourish.”⁷⁸

In addition to transmission and preservation of the lived ballad tradition in dancing societies and schools, Christensen has also looked at the importance of other cultural safeguards, such as media transmission and political decisions, for both disseminating and transmitting ballad culture. The Faroese government funds dancing societies, and Christensen points out the importance of the Faroese support for the UNESCO Convention for the Safeguarding of Intangible Cultural Heritage since 2018.⁷⁹ Previously, Faroese radio (Útvarp Føroya, started broadcasting in 1957) was an essential platform for disseminating ballads, providing an alternative to dancing societies for people to hear and learn ballads.⁸⁰ Ballads continue to be part of the programming for Kringvarp Føroya (the current Faroese radio and TV network). There is the weekly programme Dansival, which combines “bal-

Rather, they are, most importantly, a living tradition on the Faroe Islands.

The Legend of Sigurd the Dragon-Slayer

The legend about Sjúrdur finds its best-known form in the Icelandic Völsunga saga.⁸³ It concerns the story of Sigmundur (the father of Sigurdur) being killed, Sigurdur growing up, slaying the dragon Fáfnir, his meeting and engagement to Brynhildr, his marriage to Guðrún, Brynhildr’s subsequent revenge for this, and his death at the hands of Guðrún’s brothers. When she learns of Sigurdur’s death, Brynhildr kills herself. Guðrún is married to King Atli, who invites her brothers to his court and kills them. Guðrún kills her two sons with Atli and feeds them to him, and she and one of her brother’s sons kill Atli while he is asleep, and she sets his hall on fire. Guðrún marries King Jonakr and has three more sons, and Guðrún and Sigurdur’s daughter, Svanhildr, is raised with them. King Jormunrek wants to marry Svanhildr but ultimately has her trampled to death. Two of Guðrún’s sons kill their brother and then Jormunrek in revenge for Svanhildr’s death, but they are stoned to death by his retainers.

The Völsung legend was recorded in different media in different areas, such as on picture stones in Sweden, carved stave-church doors in Norway, in poems and sagas in Iceland, epic poems in Germany, and ballads on the Faroe Islands.⁸⁴ The different reflexes of the legend are known collectively

84 A full comparison with the regional versions of the Völsung/Nibelung legend is outside the scope of this study. For these variants of the Völsung legend, except the ballads, see, for example: Margeson, “Völsung Legend in Medieval Art”; Blindheim, Sigurds Saga i middelalderens billedkunst; Ney, Bland ormar och drakar; McKinnell, “The Sigmundur/Sigurdur Story.”

in the Norse world as the Völsung legend (from an Icelandic perspective) or the Nibelung legend (from a German perspective).⁸⁵ The focus of this volume is on the Faroese ballads connected to the Völsung legend. The most famous Völsung Faroese ballads, the Sjúrðar kvæði (composed of the three ballads Regin smiður, Brynhildar táttur, and Høgna táttur) provide us with unparalleled and undervalued material about Sjúrður, Brynhild, and the events and people associated with them. The content of these ballads is connected to, and the material probably to some degree drawn from, Old Icelandic saga material (oral or written) as well as material from further south in Germany (represented in text form in, e.g., the Nibelungenlied) and from ballads from the Scandinavian countries. There are also additional Faroese ballads concerning the Völsungs that will be translated here, and they also have analogues in Nordic balladry from the Scandinavian mainland.⁸⁶

The Sjúrðar kvæði is composed of three ballads: Regin the Smith (Regin smiður), The Ballad of Brynhild (Brynhildar táttur), and The Ballad of Høgna (Høgna táttur). These three ballads follow one another in manuscripts as a set and are sometimes joined by a fourth, The Second Ballad of Høgna (Annar Høgna táttur), also known as The Ballad of Aldrias (Aldrias táttur). The corpus of Faroese ballads about Sjúrður is completed by The Ballad of Gestur (Gests ríma)—also known as The Ballad of Ásla (Áslu ríma); The Ballad of Nornagestur (Nornagests ríma); Ísmal the Brave Hero (Ísmal fræga kempa); Sjúrður and the Dwarf Maiden (Sjúrður og Dvørgamoy)—also known as Dwarf Maiden I (Dvørgamoy I); The Beautiful Dwarf Maiden (Dvørgamoyggin fagra)—also known as Dwarf Maiden II (Dvørgamoy II); Ása the Dwarf Maiden (Ása Dvørgamoy)—also known as Dwarf Maiden III (Dvørgamoy III); The Ballad of Kvørfinn (Kvørfins táttur)—also known as Dwarf Maiden V (Dvørgamoy V); The Giant of Hólmgarðar (Risin úr Hólmgørðum)—also known as The Mound Ghost (Dysjadólgur); and finally The Giant of Leittraberg (Risin av Leittrabergi).⁸⁷

86 The Nordic ballads Sivard Snarensvend (Dan., DgF 2), Sivard og Brynhild (Dan., DgF 3), Frændhævn (Dan., DgF 4), Grimhilds Hævn (Dan., DgF 5), Kong Diderik og hans kæmper (DgF 7), King Diderik og Løven (Dan., DgF 9), Sigurð svein (Norw., NF 9), Sivert Snarensvend (Swed., SMB 204), Regnfred og Kragelil (Dan., DgF 22), Karl og Kragelil (Dan., DgF 23), Ormekampen (Dan., DgF 24), and Lindarormen (Norw., Utsyn 27) intersect with the same material.

87 The ballad titled Dwarf Maiden IV (Dvørgamoy IV) in Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, pp. 295–96, is not included in this volume of translations because it is a variant (labelled as variant D) of the preceding ballad, Ása the Dwarf Maiden (Ása Dvørgamoy), also known as Dwarf Maiden III (Dvørgamoy III). It is noted in Manuscripts of the Ballads

The ballads printed in CCF are edited from manuscripts in which the ballads were recorded from oral tradition from various informants. Each ballad has a number of variants. Ballad variants can be thought of as different versions of the same ballad. Each ballad variant may have different numbers of stanzas, certain details added or missing in comparison to other variants, and different language used in the narration. When the same stanzas appear in certain sections of the variants, they are often in a slightly different order. All these features are typical of texts originating in oral tradition.

Each variant of a ballad is given a letter in CCF. The ballads making up the Sjúrdar kvæði (Regin smiður, Brynhildar táttur, Høgna táttur, and often Aldrias táttur / Annar Høgna táttur) appear together in manuscripts and so are edited together in groups and assigned the same letters. The variants of the Sjúrdar kvæði are labelled A–H. Variant A, for example, comes from the manuscript NKS 345 8vo (Copenhagen, Det Kongelige Bibliotek), while B comes from Sandoyarbók (Copenhagen, Dansk Folkemindesamling, DFS 68), and D from Fugloyarbók (Copenhagen, Den Arnamagnænske Samling, AM Acc. 4 a). Sometimes the variants have subsidiary letters. Aa is the text from NKS 345 8vo, while Ab (not actually printed in CCF for the Sjúrdar kvæði) is Lyngbye's published edition of the ballads from 1822.⁸⁸ The information about the variants for each ballad and where they are sourced from is given in the content pages to CCF. In this book, we have translated the A variant of each ballad, because that variant is the oldest. This is not to say we perceive the oldest variant as most valuable or somehow as most authentic or best; we simply had to make a selection, and this seemed a sensible way to do it.

There are four sources of the A variants of the ballads translated in this book:

In each case, for the Faroese text we have used the version printed in CCF, rather than an individual edition of the manuscript or printed book.

NKS 345 8vo and Lyngbye's Færøiske Qvæder

NKS 345 8vo is a manuscript written by Johan Henrik Schrøter in 1818 and contains the oldest known versions of many of the ballads to do with Sjúrdur.⁹⁰ It was sent to H. C. Lyngbye in 1819 and used in the preparation of his Færøiske Qvæder (1822). Lyngbye himself has written this information on the title page and provided a list of contents. Schrøter collected the ballads for Lyngbye, who himself had been to the Faroe Islands in 1817 and recorded some ballads from the informant Joen Jacobsen. The ballads Lyngbye had were an incomplete version of the Sjúrdar kvæði, which had been identified as such by P. E. Müller. Müller had written to Schrøter about the incomplete ballads. In 1818, Lyngbye sent his incomplete recording to Schrøter and asked him to fill in what was lacking. Schrøter sent variants and ⁸⁹ All the ballads translated in this book are to be found in CCF, vol. 1: Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði.

an abstract of what was missing to Lyngbye already in 1818, with a promise to send what was missing. His recording of what was missing is now known as the manuscript NKS 345 8vo. Lyngbye's own recording and Schrøter's abstract and variants are lost.⁹¹ The original orthography of the manuscript was published and the language analysed by Christian Matras in 1951.⁹²

GKS 2894 I

This manuscript is a fair copy from around 1783 of Jens Chr. Svabo's ballad collection performed in 1781–1782. There are three volumes; the one ballad translated in this book, Risin í Hólmgørðum, is from volume one. There are 52 items in the collection, and it was purchased by the crown prince of Denmark, who later went on to become King Frederik VI (r. 1808–1839).⁹³ The manuscript was published by Christian Matras, who also published the accompanying word list.⁹⁴

Sandoyarbók (DFS 68)

The manuscript is written by Jóannes í Króki (Johannes Clementsen) in 1821–1831, and the ninety ballads are either recorded or, less frequently, copied by him from other texts. Í Króki provides an index that details the date recorded or copied and the name and place of the informants or collector. He also wrote an afterword describing the reasons for his collecting.⁹⁵ The manuscript has been published by Rikard Long.⁹⁶

Regarding Í Króki's (Clementsén's) name, there are several variations in spellings across different sources, where he is referred to as "Klemenson" or "Clemensen" in various scholarly literature; cf. n. 56 for more versions of his name.

Scholarly Work on the Ballads

The Faroese ballads began to be collected in the eighteenth century by Jens Chr. Svabo, although they were not published at this time. Due to continued work in the nineteenth century by Hammershaimb—a Lutheran minister who established the modern orthography of Faroese—the philologist Jørgen Bloch, and the Danish literary historian and ethnographer Svend Gruntvig (amongst others), the Føroya kvæði (CCF), the eight-volume standard edition of the ballads (including registers and melodies), was finally published in print between 1941 and 2003. The eighth volume from 2003 also contains the melodies for the CCF ballads and further ballads that were collected in the twentieth century and labelled EYL rather than CCF.⁹⁷ The Faroese ballads are also catalogued in TSB, where they are assigned a tale-type.⁹⁸ The CCF and TSB are an important starting point for anybody beginning in Faroese ballad research. CCF vol. 7 provides a catalogue of some of the manuscripts the ballads are recorded in (however not all ballad manuscripts are listed) and registers of first lines, refrains, and medieval ballad types in the Faroese corpus and their analogues, informants, ballad collectors, scribes and owners of manuscripts, known poets, and proper names while TSB offers descriptions of the tale types found in the ballads and a list of the medieval Faroese ballads.⁹⁹

In TSB, six types of ballad emerge: A. ballads of the supernatural; B. legendary ballads; C. historical ballads; D. ballads of chivalry; E. heroic ballads; and F. jocular ballads.¹⁰⁰ Medieval Faroese ballads have been studied almost exclusively by reference to category E, the heroic ballads, which make up half the medieval corpus and number approximately 100.¹⁰¹ Nevertheless, there are around 90 more ballads from the other categories of ballads that are rarely referenced in the scholarly discourse.

Translations and editions of individual ballads are thin on the ground.¹⁰² Svabo's recordings were published, and the manuscript collection of ballads DFS 68 (Copenhagen, Dansk Folkemindesamling), known as Sandoyarbók, compiled by Jóannes í Króki (i.e., Johannes Clementsen), has been edited and published, and a further compilation by Jóannes í Króki known as Hentzasavn has also been edited.¹⁰³ The ballads about Sigurðr were collected and translated into Danish by Lyngbye in the early nineteenth century and into English by Smith-Dampier in the early twentieth century, into German in the 1980s, and into Spanish in 2008.¹⁰⁴ There is a lack of modern and comprehensive translations of the ballads, particularly into English (barring the one collected translation of the Sjúrdar kvæði into old-fashioned English by Smith-Dampier from 1934), and a lack of introductory and analytical material in ballad scholarship that touches on Faroese material.¹⁰⁵

From the point of view of Old Norse philology and medieval studies more widely, the Völsung ballads of the Faroe Islands—in particular the Sjúrdar kvæði—are an important and undervalued source.¹⁰⁶ That medieval Northern Europe had a thriving and well-developed literary culture is well-known, but research on the different geographical areas has been uneven. Even though these ballads transmit the familiar story of Sigurd the Dragon Slayer, they are seldom mentioned in connection with analyses of the Völsung and Nibelung legends, even when the Icelandic and German textual material and the Norwegian and Swedish visual material are well-trodden patches in medieval studies. The Faroe Islands have a large literary corpus, but the literary tradition of the medieval Faroe Islands is still obscure, and the Faroe Islands are largely absent from the literary history of the Nordic countries. This is despite the Faroe Islands having strong ties culturally, politically, and geographically to all of northern Europe; it thus was likely an important arena for cultural exchange and dissemination.

106 It should be mentioned that this retrospective view of the Faroese ballads does not account for the full importance of the ballad tradition in contemporary Faroese society. The ballads were an important aspect of Faroese nation building, as reflected in the work of Simonsen, "Literature, Imagining and Memory," and continue to play an important role in Faroese culture today, as explored in the work of Árnadóttir, "Chain Dancing."

Previous scholarship has engaged with the Faroese ballads (especially heroic ballads) as derivative of Old Icelandic or mainland Scandinavian literature.¹⁰⁷ The similarity in content has been noted briefly in comparison with other Norse tales.¹⁰⁸ Studies also discuss the oral-formulaic nature of the ballads (the most thorough study is still de Boor from 1918), and more recently Hansen treats repeated motifs in selected Faroese ballads.¹⁰⁹ In his reconstruction of the earliest stages of the Brynhildr legend, Andersson mentions Brynhildar táttr only in passing and the ballad is not mentioned in the stemma that anticipates his conclusions.¹¹⁰ In terms of gender studies, Agneta Ney has written the most important recent monograph on Sigurðr Fáfnisbani from the perspective of the manly ideal in Old Norse literature, and she provides a thorough treatment of the visual material but does not treat the Faroese ballads.¹¹¹ Malan Marnersdóttir has written about women and the ballad tradition, while Brynhild Kamban has published her MA thesis on gender and the narratology of the Sjúrdar kvæði as a short book.¹¹² Scholars also situate the ballads in terms of their modern cultural context and their role in nineteenth-century nation-building, although a major recent anthology on the subject includes Norway, Sweden, Iceland, the UK, Germany, and Denmark but not the Faroe Islands.¹¹³ Several ballads and cycles have been treated on an individual basis, for example in the work of Patricia

About the Translations in this Book

W. P. Ker writes that “to bring out, in English, anything like the value of the Danish ballads would require the finest poetical skill,” and this sentiment can also be applied to Faroese ballads.¹¹⁵ We have not tried to produce translations with immense literary value in their own right; the intention behind the translation presented here is not to mirror the beauty of the Faroese but rather to aid in understanding it. Therefore, we hope that the reader will approach this book of ballad translations with the idea that reading and making sense of the Faroese should be the primary aim, with the English version as a helpful aid.

The translations offered in this book are prose and are a line-by-line rather than a stanza-by-stanza translation, except on the rare occasions when it simply made no sense in English to retain a literal translation of a line. The aim of this approach is to facilitate easy comparison with the Faroese version of the text and to provide a basis for further study. For this reason, the translations are more literal than poetic. Larry Syndergaard, who has studied English translations of the Scandinavian medieval ballads closely, defines a literal translation as following “the original very closely, with such changes as needed to make the translation idiomatic,” and a close translation as following “the original quite closely, with minor substantive changes, very limited structural changes, and limited ‘enhancement’ or intensification.”¹¹⁶ Our translation strategy likely lands between these; we have added the occasional pronoun or left out the occasional particle in the Faroese that seemed to be purely for metrical purposes rather than meaning. Grammatical tenses can change mid-stanza in the ballads, and here we have chosen to follow the Faroese and change the tense in the English translation. No changes to the stanza order have been made, nor have any changes to the substance of the narrative.

114 For example, Conroy, “Sniolv’s Kvæði”; Conroy, “‘Hernilds Kvæði.’” See also Kleiner and Piotrovsky, “From Epic to Ballad: The Faroese ‘Sjúrður Cycle.’”

115 Cited in Syndergaard, English Translations of the Scandinavian Medieval Ballads, 39.

116 Syndergaard, English Translations of the Scandinavian Medieval Ballads, 31.

Very occasionally the order of two lines has been switched in the translation to preserve the sense in English, and this has been indicated in the footnotes. Explication of the narrative has not been added to the stanzas but is instead contained in the footnotes. Sometimes the Faroese makes little sense or is at best difficult to interpret, and these difficulties have also been indicated in the footnotes. The footnotes are intended to orientate the reader in the action of the narrative, to aid with difficult words and readings, and, occasionally, to justify translation choices. The vocabulary used in the ballads contains a number of poetic words (heiti) not used in ordinary discourse. These have been marked in the footnotes and translated with the ordinary word in the translation. Kennings found in the ballads have also been explained in the footnotes. We have used the Faroese names exactly as they appear in the ballads in CCF, although in the nominative case in the English. The names are often inconsistent in form, also often within the same ballad (or between the title and the ballad text, for example “Høgni” in the title and “Høgnar” in the text).

Sometimes refrains are not recorded in CCF with the ballad, and if that is the case in the edition, no refrain has been given in the translation. In the cases of those missing refrains, it is possible to consult Clausen’s volume of melodies, which gives refrains for the ballad versions she records.¹¹⁷ It should be noted that different refrains can be used with the same ballad.

THE BALLADS

REGIN THE SMITH (REGIN SMÍÐUR)

1. Vilja tær nú lýða á, meðan eg man kvøða,
um teir ríku kongarnar, sum eg vil nú um røða.

Would you listen now, while I will sing,
about those mighty kings,
that I will now speak about.

*Refrain Grani bar gullið av heiði,
brá hann sínum brandi av reiði,
Sjúrður vann av orminum,
Grani bar gullið av heiði.*

*Grani carried the gold from the heath,
he brandished his blade in a fury,
Sjúrður defeated the dragon,
Grani carried the gold from the heath.*

2. Sigmundur var ein jallsins son, men hann fekk eina so høgborna konu.

Sigmundur was a son of an earl,
but he married such a high-born wife.

3. So glaðiliga drekka tey í ríkinum jól,
so fagurliga byggja tey tann ríka kongins stól.

They celebrated so joyfully in the kingdom at Christmas,¹ so beautifully they sat in the throne of the mighty king.

4. Tá var har so mikil ríka manna gongd, ófriður gekk á kongins land.

At that time there was such a great number of mighty men around, war descended on the king's land.

5. Ríða teir í bardagar, suður upp á strand,
so reystiliga vardu teir tann ríka kongins land

They rode into battle, in the south on the beach, so bravely they defended the mighty king's land.

6. Løgdu sínum bátunum suður við strand,
so listiliga vardu teir tann ríka kongins land

They drew their boats up south at the beach, so merrily² they defended
the mighty king's land.

1 At drekka jól literally means “to drink Christmas,” but really means “to celebrate Christmas,” although it is clear where the emphasis lies in the celebrations.

2 Here we have translated lystiligur as “merrily.” However, the word could potentially be listuliga, meaning “cunningly” or “slyly,” since the words lystiliga and listuliga sound the same. Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, 1, has listelia.

3 Døpul mein literally means "double harm."

4 The meaning of vánaðin, here translated "the field," is uncertain since the word is unknown elsewhere. In Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, the word is originally spelt as Vaanajin (1). We have picked "the field" in the sense of "battlefield" due to the readings in the other variants. In the B variants of the ballad (Ba and Bb), the equivalent word is garðin: Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 34, st. 10; vol. 1, p. 58, st. 9, meaning "vicinity" or "fenced off area." In variant C, the word is herin: Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 86, st. 8, meaning "army." In variant D, the word is valin: Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 106, st. 9, meaning "battlefield." In E the word is vágnið: Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 140, st. 6., which the editors follow with a (!) since this is also meaningless. In F we find vølli: Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 165, st. 6. meaning "field"; and in G heyggin: Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 169, st. 7, meaning "hill." Hammershaimb, which is printed as variant H in CCF, has vøllin: see Sjúrdar kvæði, p. 4, st. 9; Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 191, st. 9, meaning "field." Lyngbye has Veðlin: Færøiske Qvæder, p. 48, st. 9, meaning "battlefield."

5 Heilur means "hale" in English, "healthy and sound."

12. “Seint manst tú, Hjördis, fáa til tess ráð,
gera tey smyrslini,
sum grøða míni sár.
“It will be too late, Hjördis before you’re able to to make those balms
that would heal my wounds.
13. Hundsins synir í randarný skaðan gjørdu tær, eitur var í svørðinum,
teir bóru móti mær.
Sons of Hundingur⁶ in battle inflicted the injury on you, poison was on the swords, that they carried against me.
14. Áðrenn teir góvu mær tað fyrsta sár,
sundur gekk mítt svørðið
í lutirnar tvá.
Before they gave me
the first wound,
my sword broke
into two pieces.
15. Sundur gekk mítt svørðið, og sundur gekk mítt spjót, Hundsins synir
riðu mær allir ímót.
My sword broke,
and my spear broke,
Sons of Hundingur
all rode against me.
16. Sundur gekk mítt svørðið í lutir tvá, tí mundi eg ongan
sigur av teim fáa
My sword broke
into two pieces,
for that reason I won no victory over them.
17. Tað annað sárið, teir góvu mær tá,
illa neit í hjartanum,
tað hyggi av tí gár.
The second wound, they gave me then,
a terrible pain to the heart, my eyesight is fading because of it.⁷ 18. Tað, ið tú hevur í vónum hjá tær, tað er sveinsbarn,
føð tað væl við ærum upp,
og gev tí Sjúrdar navn.
The child that you are expecting is a boy-child,
bring it up well with honour, and give it the name Sjúrdur.
19. Tak tú hesar
svørðslutir tvá,
lat tú teir til smiðju bera ungum soni, tú ár.
Take these
two pieces of sword, have them taken to a smithy to the young son you have.

6 Here it says “the Hundingur,” although Hundingur is a person (in the Völsung legend killed by the hero Helgi Hundingsbani, in some versions of the tale the half-brother of Sigurðr Fáfnisbani).

7 At gá av is a verb form used in ballads for at ganga av, meaning in this sense “to ease off” or “stop.”

20. Av sonnum eg tað sigi nú til tín:
hesin sami sonur
skal hevna deyða mín
- I tell the truth
to you now:
this same son
shall avenge my death.
21. Regin smiður býr fyri handan á,
honum skalt tú fáa
hesar svørðslutir tvá.
- Regin the smith lives
on the other side of the river,
you shall give him
these two pieces of sword.
22. Og so má hann gera tað so reinliga hart,
bæði má hann vega við tí steinin og jarn.
- And he must make it
so very hard,
he must be able to split with it both stone and iron.
23. Frænar eitur ormurin, á Glitrarheiði liggur, Regin er ein góður smiður,
fáum er hann dyggur.
- The dragon is called Frænar, who lies on Glitrarheiði,⁸ Regin is a good smith,
he is loyal to few.⁹ 24. Eg fáí ikki, Hjørdis, longur snakkað við teg, hetta man vera deyðastundin, ið komin er á meg.”
- I’m not able, Hjørdis, to speak with you anymore, this will be my moment of death which has come over me.” 25. Grátandi snúðist Hjørdis Sigmundi frá,
allar hennara hirðkonur feldu fyri hann tár.
- Hjørdis turned crying from Sigmundur, all of her ladies-in-waiting shed tears for him.
26. Grátandi fór nú Hjørdis í sínum sali at sitja, Hjalprek kongur fyrstur og fremstur frúnna kom at vitja.
- Crying, Hjørdis now went to sit in her hall,
King Hjalprek first and foremost came to visit the queen.
27. Frúgvín gekk sær við barninum níggju mánar sínar, til at teirri stundum leið, hon fœðir ein svein so fríðan.
- The queen was pregnant for her nine months, until the time came that she gave birth to a beautiful boy.

8 For Glitrarheiði, see Andreassen, “Jesus á Glitrarheiði.”

9 Sigmundur is telling Hjørdis not to trust Regin, even though they need his help.

28. Nú er enn sum ofta fyrr, duld eru døpul mein,
frúgvín er gingín í høgaloft, hon fœðir ein ungan svein
- Now it is as so often before, great sorrow is kept to oneself, the queen went into the hall,¹⁰ she gave birth to a young boy.
29. Sveipar hon hann í klæði væl, tá ið hann kom í heim, Sjúrða bað hon nevna sær tann geviliga svein.
- She wrapped him well in cloth, when he came into the world,
she ordered him to be called Sjúrður,
the valiant boy.
30. Barnið varð sveipt í klæði væl, og gott er til góðan at evna, síðan bað hon presti bera, Sjúrða bað hon nevna.
- The child was wrapped well in cloth, it is good to get something good fulfilled,¹¹ later she ordered him to be carried to the priest, she ordered him to be called Sjúrður.
31. Hann varð borin frá kirkjuni aftur til móður sín,
meira læt hon røkta hann enn alt sítt gull í skrín.
- He was carried from the church back to his mother, she took better care of him than all her gold in the coffers.
32. Barnið varð borið frá kirkjuni og sett á móðurs fang, meira legði hon røkt á hann enn alt sítt gull og sprang.
- The child was carried from the church and placed in his mother's lap, she tended to him more
than all her gold and land.
33. Barnið varð borið frá kirkjuni og sett á móðurs knæ, meiri legði hon røkt á hann enn alt sítt gull og fæ.
- The child was carried from the church and placed on his mother's knee, she tended to him more
than all her gold and riches.
34. Sigmundur kongurin frá henni gekk, Hjalprek kongurin
hana aftur fekk.
- King Sigmundur
went from her,
King Hjalprek
married her after that.
35. Hjalprek kongurin, tann jallsins son,
hann fekk nú sær
so høgborna konu.
- King Hjalprek,
the earl's son,
he now got himself
such a high-born wife.

10 Høgaloft is the loft room, although sometimes means simply “hall” in ballads. It is a chamber on the second floor and would have been the most private area.

11 The meaning of this is not very clear. Lyngbye glosses this line as “Og godt er til Lykken at evne” (Færøiske Qvæder, 57n29), and it could refer to the fulfilling of Sigmundur's prophecy about the birth of a boy that he made as he was dying.

36. So var tað við Sjúrdá, mikil gav hann vekst,
meiri vaks hann í ein mánað,
enn onnur börn í seks.
- So it was with Sjúrdur,
that he grew such a lot,
he grew more in one month,
than other children in six.
37. Hann vaks upp hjá síni móður, tað er einki hól,
meiri vaks hann í ein mánað,
enn onnur börn í tólv.
- He grew up with his mother,
it's no exaggeration,
he grew more in one month,
than other children in twelve.
38. Hann vaks upp hjá síni móður,
hon gav honum gangin hægst,
hann royndi meira í ein mánað
enn onnur börn í seks.
- He grew up with his mother,
she gave him the best upbringing,
he achieved more in one month
than other children in six.
39. Hann vaks upp hjá síni móður, miklan fekk hann alva,
styrknaði meiri í ein mánað
enn onnur börn í tólv.
- He grew up with his mother,
he got such great strength,
he got stronger in one month
than other children in twelve.
40. Hann vaks upp hjá síni móður,
lukkan honum góð,
hann vann meira í ein mánað
enn onnur börn í tólv.
- He grew up with his mother,
his luck¹² was good,
he achieved more in one month
than other children in twelve.
41. Hann vaks upp í ríkinum til geviligan mann, Hjalprek kongurin
fostraði hann.
- He grew up in the kingdom
to a valiant man,¹³
King Hjalprek
fostered him.
42. Hann vaks upp í ríkinum skjótt og ikki leingi, til hann gjørdist í høggum tungur, hann bardi kongins dreingir.¹⁴
- He grew up in the kingdom
quickly and not slowly, until he could deal out heavy blows, he fought the king's men.
43. Hann var sær á leikvøllum, ímillum manna herjar,
rívur upp stórar eikikelvar, lemjar summar til heljar.
- He was on the playing field, creating havoc amongst men, tears up big oak logs, beats some to death.

12 This is “good luck” in the sense of good fortunes.

13 This means that he grows up into/becomes a valiant man. On the other hand, if you were to read a more Danish sense into this line, it may mean that he grew up in the kingdom of a valiant man.

14 Drongur (pl. dreingir) is a word for “hero” in the ballads, although ordinarily meaning “boy.”

44. Niður settust sveinarnir, vreiðir ið teir vóru: “Líkari var tær faðir at hevnt enn berja os so stórum.”
- The boys¹⁵ sat down,
they were angry:
“It would be better to avenge your father than to beat us so badly.” 45. Sveinur kastar skildri niður, lystir ei longur at leika, gongur fyri sína sælu móður við reyðar kinnar og bleikar.
- The boy throws down the shield, doesn't want to play anymore, goes before his dear¹⁶ mother pale and with red cheeks.
46. Sveinur gekk til móður sína, talar rætt og slætt: “Sig mær sannan faðir at mær, ein hvør vil vita sín ætt.
- The boy went to his mother, saying simply:
“Tell me who my true father is,
everyone wants to know their lineage.
47. Hoyr nú tað, mín sæla móðir, sig mær satt ífrá:
varð mín faðir av lívi tikin,
ella doyði hann á strá?
- Now listen to this, my dear mother,
tell me truthfully:
was my father killed or did he die in bed?¹⁷ 48. Hoyr tú nú, mín sæla móðir, spyrja má eg nú teg:
varð mín faðir við váknum vigin?
Dult er tað fyri meg.
- Now listen, my dear mother,
now I have to ask you:
was my father killed with weapons?
It is kept¹⁸ from me.
49. Hoyr tú, mín hin sæla móðir, sig mær satt ífrá:
er hann enn á vørildini, ið mín faðir vá?”
- Listen, my dear mother,
tell me truthfully:
is he still in the world,¹⁹
the one who slew my father?” 50. “Um hann er í vørildini, ið tín faðir vá,
tað verður ikki, meðan tú livir, tú sòmdir av honum fár.
- “If he's in the world, the one who slew your father,
it won't be while you're alive, that you will get redress from him.

15 Sveinar (sg. svein) usually means “boys” but can also refer to the king’s men, sometimes footmen. Here we have chosen boy, since Sjúrdur is also referred to as a boy in the following stanza.

16 Sælur literally means “blessed” but is used in ballads to mean “beloved” or “dear.”

17 This literally means “or did he die in the straw,” since bed mattresses were stuffed with straw (cf. the English expression “to hit the hay” for going to bed).

18 It is kept a secret from him.

19 Vørild is used in ballads for verøld (world). Here Sjúrdur is asking if this person is still alive.

51. Hundsins synir í randarný teir tín faðir vá, tú manst ikki, meðan tú livir, sømdir av teimum fá.”
The sons of Hundingur in battle they slew your father,
you won’t, while you live, get redress from them.” 52. Sveinur svaraði síni móður, alt væl sum hann kundi: “Ofra hevur vaksið ungum rakka hvassar tenn í munni.”
The boy answered his mother, as well as he could:
“Often a young dog has grown sharp teeth in its mouth.” 53. Frúgvín gekk at tí kistuni, sum øll var í gulli tvigin: “Her skalt tú síggja tey herklæði, sum tín varð faðir í vigin.”
The lady went to that chest, which was all dipped in gold: “Here you shall see the battle clothes, in which your father was slain.” 54. Hon læsir upp ta kistuna, sum nógv var í gull og fæ, hon tekur upp teir svørðslutir og kastar Sjúrdá á knæ.
She unlocks that chest,
in which was much gold and wealth, she picks up those sword pieces and throws them on Sjúrdur’s knee.
55. Hon tekur upp ta skjúrtuna, sum øll var í blóði drigin: “Her sært tú nú, mín sæli sonur, hvussu tín varð faðirín vigin.” She picks up that shirt, that was all drenched in blood: “Now you see here, my dear son, how your father was slain.” 56. Hon tekur hesar svørðslutir, Sjúrdá hon teir fær: “Hetta gav tín hin sæli faðir, ið mikið gott unti mæ.
She takes these sword pieces,
she gives them to Sjúrdur: “Your dear father gave these to me, who loved me very much.
57. Tak tú hesar
svørðslutir tvá,
lat tú tær eitt annað svørðið av teim slá.
Take these
two sword pieces,
have yourself another sword made from them.
58. Regin smiður býr fyri handan á,
honum skalt tú fáa
hesar svørðslutir tvá.
Regin the smith lives
on the other side of the river,
you shall give him
these two pieces of sword.²⁰
59. Honum skalt tú fáa
hesar svørðslutir tvá,
smíða væl og virðiliga, til tú ríða má.
You shall give him
these two sword pieces, to forge them well and carefully, you must ride there.

²⁰ Hjördis repeats Sigmundur’s words exactly from st. 21.

60. Frænar eitur ormurin,
á Glitrarheiði liggur,
Regin er ein góður smiður,
fáum er hann dyggur.”
- The dragon is called Frænar,
who lies on Glitrarheiði, Regin is a good smith,
he is loyal to few.”²¹
61. Tað var hin ungi Sjúrdur, honum mundi einki fresta:
“Hoyr nú tað, mín sæla móðir, vís mær á veldigan hest!”
- That was the young Sjúrdur, he wouldn’t delay anything:
“Now listen, my dear mother,
show me²² a magnificent horse!” 62. “Gakk tú fram at fossinum, varpa stein í á,
kjós tær hest til handar tann, sum ikki víkir frá!”
- “Proceed to the waterfall, hurl a rock into the river, choose that horse for yourself, that doesn’t run away!” 63. Hann gekk sær at fossinum, kastaði stein í á,
tók sær tann av hestunum,
sum ikki víkti frá.
- He went to the waterfall, threw a rock into the river, took that one of the horses for himself, that didn’t run away.
64. Hann var í tí ríkinum ein tann allarbesti, síðan varð hann kallaður Grani Sjúrdar hestur.
- It was in the kingdom
the best of all of them, after which it was called Grani, Sjúrdur’s horse.
65. Árla var um morgunin meg man rætt um minna, Sjúrdur kvittar yvir um á Regin smið at finna.
- Early in the morning
if I remember correctly, Sjúrdur leaves across the river
to find Regin the smith.
66. Sjúrdur leyp á Grana bak sama morgun snimma, so ríður hann sær yvir um á Regin smið at finna.
- Sjúrdur jumps on Grani’s back early the same morning, then he rides across the river
to find Regin the smith.
67. Tað var hin ungi Sjúrdur, ríður fyri dyrnar fram, Regin kastar smíðinum,
hann tekur jarn í hond.
- That was the young Sjúrdur, riding before the doors, Regin throws his tools down,²³ he holds iron in his hand.

21 Hjördis repeats Sigmundur’s words exactly from st. 23.

22 This is in the sense of “show me to” or “indicate” a horse, to help him find one.

23 It literally says that Regin throws the tools.

68. "Hoyr tú meg nú, Regin, hetta er fyrsta mín ferð, ger mær tað, tú Regin smiður, smíða mær nú eitt svørð!" 69. Tak nú frá mær hesar svørðslutir tvá,
tú mást mær eitt javngott svørð av teimum slá." 70. "Ver vælkomin, Sjúrdur, tú ert mær so kær,
dvølst í ríkinum nakra tíð og hesa nátt hjá mær!" 71. "Eg fáí ikki, Regin smiður, dvølst í nátt hjá tær, Hjalprek kongur saknast meg úr hásetinum frá sær.
72. Smíða mær nú svørðið skjært og so reint,
bæði má eg vega við tí
jarnið og so stein."
73. Regin tók við svørðinum, og legði hann tað í eld, einans náttina
hevði hann tað í gerð.
74. Einans náttina
hevði hann tað í gerð,
hugaður var nú Sjúrdur ungi, har ið hann fer.
75. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin skín so snimma,
Sjúrdur loypur á Grana bak
Regin smið at finna.
76. Sjúrdur er riðin fyri dyrnar fram,
Regin kastar smíði
og tekur sær svørð í hond.
- "Now listen, Regin, this is my first journey,
do it for me, Regin the smith, forge me a sword now!
- Now take from me these
two sword pieces,
you have to forge an equally good sword from them."
- "Welcome, Sjúrdur,
you are so dear to me,
stay in this kingdom for some time and this night with me!"
- "I'm not able, Regin the smith, to stay the night with you, King Hjalprek misses me from his high-seat.
- Now forge me the sword brittle and so pure,
with it I have to split both iron and also stone."²⁴
- Regin took the sword, and put it in the fire, one single night
he worked on it.
- One single night
he worked on it,
young Sjúrdur was now eager,
he went there.
- Early in the morning,
the sun shines so early,
Sjúrdur jumps on Grani's back
to find Regin the smith.
- Sjúrdur has ridden
before the doors, Regin throws his tools down and takes the sword in his hand.

²⁴ This echoes Sigmundur's wishes in st. 22. Cf. also st. 85.

77. “Smíðað havi eg svørðið, gjørt havi eg tað til,
bilar tær ei hugurin,
lívið leggi eg við.
78. Smíðað havi eg svørðið skjært og so reint,
bæði mást tú vega við tí
jarn og so stein.”
79. Sjúrdur gekk at sterkum steðja, roynir alt við hast,
fyrsta høggið, ið hann brá, í tógva lutir brast.
80. “Deyðan ert tú, Regin smiður, av mær verð,
at tú mundi svikið meg í váknagerð.”
81. Tekur hann hesar svørðslutir, kastar á Regins knæ, Regin smiður skalv
sum eitt liljulað.
82. Legði hann hesar svørðslutir aftur í hans hond, tá skalv hondin á Regin smiði sum eitt liljuvand.
83. “Smíðar tú annað svørðið so mær,
deyðan mást tú, Regin Smiður, vænta tær.
- “I have forged the sword,
I have made it,
if you are not lacking in courage, then I will give my life as security.²⁵
- I have forged the sword
brittle and so pure,
you are able to split with it both iron and also stone.”²⁶
- Sjúrdur went to a strong anvil, trying it in all haste,
the first blow that he swung, it broke in to two pieces.²⁷
- “Death, Regin the smith, you are worthy of from me, since you would betray me in the making of the weapon.”
- He takes these sword pieces, throws them on Regin’s knee, Regin the smith trembled like a lily leaf.²⁸
- He laid these sword pieces back into his hand,²⁹ then the hand of Regin the smith trembled like a slender maiden.³⁰
- “If you forge the second sword like that for me, then death, Regin the smith, you must expect.

25 Regin seems to be saying here that if Sjúrdur would dare to kill him, he vouches for the quality of the sword with his life. He is bluffing here, since he has only spent one night making the sword, which proves to be of poor quality.

26 This echoes Sjúrdur’s words in st. 72.

27 It is the sword that breaks, not the anvil.

28 This is a particularly unflattering depiction of Regin, since women are often associated with lilies in the ballads. See the stanza below, st. 82.

29 Sjúrdur lays the sword pieces into Regin’s hand.

30 A liljuvand (or liljuvond) is a slender maiden in ballads, since lilja means “woman” and vond means “mast.” Lilies are also associated with the Virgin Mary.

84. Tú mást gera tað
so reinliga hart,
bæði má tað vera
tolið og so skarpt.
You must make it
so very hard,
it must be both resilient and very sharp.
85. Smíða mær svørðið skjört og so reint,
bæði má eg vega við tí
jarn og so stein.”
Forge the sword for me
brittle and so pure,
with it I have to split both iron and also stone.”³¹ 86. “Hoyr tað, Sjúrdur ungi, smíði eg tær svørð,
hjartað úr orminum
vil eg hava í verð.
“Listen, young Sjúrdur, if I forge you a sword,
the heart of the dragon
I want as my portion.”³²
87. Smíði eg tær svørðið, geri eg tað so,
hjartað úr orminum
leggi eg virðin á.”
If I forge you the sword, if I make it like that,
the heart of the dragon
I claim as payment.”
88. Regin gongur at smíðinum, legði svørð í eld,
tríati næturnar
hevði hann tað í gerð.
Regin goes to the smithing, laid the sword in the fire, thirty nights
he worked on it.”³³
89. Tríati næturnar
hevði hann tað í gerð, hugurin var um Sjúrða unga og um hansara ferð.
Thirty nights
he worked on it,
young Sjúrdur was thinking about it and about his journey.”³⁴ 90. Tað var um ein árla morgun, sólin skein so víða, Sjúrdur kvittar yvir á til Regin smið at ríða.
It was early one morning,
the sun shone so widely,
Sjúrdur leaves across the river to ride to Regin the smith.”³⁵

31 This is nearly identical to st. 72 (spoken also by Sjúrdur), which echoes Sigmundur’s words in st. 22.

32 In the ballad they have not explicitly discussed the dragon, although Frænar has been mentioned, but we are to understand that they have discussed killing the dragon already.

33 This is in contrast to the one night Regin worked on the previous sword.

34 This could also mean that Regin was thinking about Sjúrdur and his journey. It is not quite clear.

35 Cf. Sjúrdur departing in st. 66.

91. Tað var hin snari Sjúrdur, reid fyri dyrnar fram, Regin kastar smíði
og tekur svørðið í hond.
- That was the swift Sjúrdur, rode before the doors, Regin throws down his tools
and takes the sword in his hand.
92. “Ver vælkomin, Sjúrdur, hvussu er at tí vón?
Góðar hefur tú yvirvánir í allari ásjón.
- “Welcome, Sjúrdur,
what are you expecting?
Your advantages are good it would appear.
93. Ver vælkomin, Sjúrdur, smíðað havi eg svørð,
bilar tær ei hugurin,
tú verður so víða á ferð.
- Welcome, Sjúrdur,
I have forged a sword,
if you are not lacking in courage,³⁶ you will journey far and wide.
94. Smíðað havi eg svørðið skært og so reint,
bæði mást tú vega við tí
jarnið og so stein.”
- I have forged the sword bright and true, you must split with it both iron and also stone.” 95. Sjúrdur gongur at steðjanum høggur á við fart, hvørki mátti røkka ella stökka, so var svørðið hart.
- Sjúrdur goes to the anvil strikes with haste, it must neither snap nor break, so hard was the sword.
96. So høgg hann Sjúrdur fastliga til,
sundur kleyv hann steðjan og stabban við.
- Then Sjúrdur struck
so powerfully,
he split the anvil apart and also the block underneath.
97. Hann vá ein orm av giltum upp, annan skamt íhjá, Gramm kallaði hann svørðið, á gólvinum lá.
- He slew a glittering³⁷ snake,³⁸
and another nearby,
he called the sword Gramm, that lay on the floor.

36 He echoes his words in st. 77.

37 We assume giltum is the same as gyltum, meaning golden, but also glittering, in the sense that the scales of the dragon are catching the sunlight. Hammershaimb notes for his st. 85 the first and second lines as a variant of the stanza as presented here, and questions whether af giltum could be af kelduni. See Sjúrdar Kvæði, 11n1. This could mean from the bog, marsh or source of river. Lyngbye seems to suggest that this is a gilded snake, and that it could refer to the type of snake. See Færøiske Qvæder, 81n90.

38 We have chosen to translate this as snake here, but it could be a dragon (with another nearby). The episode seems to be mentioned too casually for it to be a dragon, however.

98. “Hoyr tú, frægi Sjúrdur, av kongaborið vív,
fyri tílfkar hævdingar
vil eg lata lív.
“Listen, valiant Sjúrdur, born of a woman of royal descent,³⁹ for such chieftains
I will give my life.
99. Hoyr tú, frægi Sjúrdur, siga mást tú mær,
nær tú ríður á Glitrarheiði, eg vil fylgja tær.”
Listen, valiant Sjúrdur,
you must tell me,
when you ride to Glitrarheiði,
I want to join you.”
100. “Fyrst fari eg í randarný Hundsins synir at fella, síðan fari eg á Glitrarheiði, tí mær man einki bella.
“First I will go into battle to slay the sons of Hundingur, then I will go to Glitrarheiði, because nothing will hurt me.
101. Fyrst fari eg í randarný Hundsins synir at finna síðan ríði eg á Glitrarheiði, tí tað verður mær minna.”
First I will go into battle to find the sons of Hundingur then⁴⁰ I will ride to Glitrarheiði, because that will be the lesser deed⁴¹ for me.” 102. Snarliga vá hann Hundsins synir, snart kom hann aftur úr teirri, stokkut stund hann dvøldist við, hann reið á Glitrarheiði.
Quickly he slew the sons of Hundingur, soon he came back from them, for a fleeting moment he lingered,
he rode to Glitrarheiði.
103. Allar vá hann Hundsins synir, væl kom hann aftur frá teim, skammri stund av ríkinum
hann reið á Glitrarheiði.
He slew all of the sons of Hundingur, he came back from them safely, after a short time away from the kingdom
he rode to Glitrarheiði.
104. Tað var svikarin Regin smiður, hugsar so við sær: “Kvittar tú á Glitrarheiði, eg skal fylgja tær.”
That was the traitor Regin the smith,
He thinks to himself:
“If you leave for Glitrarheiði,
I will join you.”
105. Tað var hin ungi Sjúrdur, ríður fram yvir skóg,
møtir honum ein gamal maður settist niður á ló.
That was the young Sjúrdur,
riding over the forest, an old man meets him
he⁴² sits down on the sandy beach.

39 Vív is a poetic word for woman.

40 Síðdan in the Faroese is spelled wrongly; it should be siðan. It is spelt sujan in the critical edition of the manuscript. See Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, p. 6, st. 101.

41 In the Faroese, “deed” is understood.

42 It is not clear whether Sjúrdur or the old man sits down on the beach.

106. Tað var hin ungi Sjúrdur, ríður á Glitrarheiði, møtti hann einum gomlum manni
mitt á sínari leið.
- That was the young Sjúrdur,
riding to Glitrarheiði, he met an old man in the middle of his journey.
107. Tað var hin ungi Sjúrdur, hann situr á baldum hesti,
so er mær av sonnum sagt,
at tað var Nornagestur.
- That was the young Sjúrdur,
he sits on a bold horse,
so I've been truthfully told,⁴³ that it was Nornagestur.
108. "Hoyr tú, reysti Sjúrdur, siga skalt tú mær:
hvør er hasin vesæli maður, í fylgi er við tær?"
- "Listen, brave Sjúrdur, you have to tell me:
who is that wretched man accompanying you?" 109. "Regin smíður ormins bróðir hann er, tí er hann ein í hesari ferð."
- "He is Regin the smith the dragon's brother, therefore he is on this journey."
110. "Hvør bað teg, Sjúrdur, grava gravir tvær?
Deyðan hevur sá maður aktað tær."
- "Who told you, Sjúrdur,
to dig two trenches?
That man has death intended for you." 111. "Regin legði ráðini, at grava gravir tvær, tí er hann við mær
í hesari ferð."
- "Regin gave me the advice
to dig two trenches,
therefore he is with me on this journey." 112. "Hvur Regin biðið teg
grava gravir tvær,
hann er verstí Guds svikari, deyða vil hann teg.
- "If Regin has told you
to dig two trenches,
then he is the worst of God's traitors, he wants death for you.
113. Grav tú nú tógvar, ta triðju har íhjá, ein mun av eitrinum
man tað líva tá.
- Now dig two,
the third nearby,
a mouthful of the poison will still be left.

43 The narrator of the ballad saying that they have been told something is part of the genre convention of the ballad and lends credibility to their story. It does not make it conditional or diminish the credibility, but rather makes what they have been told a fact.

114. Grav tú tær tríggjar, ta fjórðu skamt íhjá, síðan skalt tú, Sjúrdur, at jørðini náa.
- Dig yourself three,
the fourth close by,
then, Sjúrdur, you should lie in the soil.⁴⁴
115. Grav tú gryvjur fyra, um tú verður móður, harvið skalt tú verja teg fyri ormins eiturlóði.”
- Dig four trenches,
if you become tired,
in that way you shall defend yourself from the poisonous blood of the dragon.” 116. Ormurin er skriðin av gullinum, tað man frættast víða,
Sjúrdur situr á Grana baki, býr seg til at ríða.
- The dragon has slithered off the gold,
it was told far and wide, Sjúrdur is sitting on Grani’s back, preparing himself to ride.
117. Ormurin er skriðin av gullinum, langt ger hann skrið, Sjúrdur trívur um benjarkolv, hann býr sítt svørðið til.
- The dragon has slithered off the gold,
he slithers a long way, Sjúrdur grasps the sword,⁴⁵ he readies the sword.
118. Tríati alin var fossurin, ið ormurin undir lá,
høvur og sporl á jørðini, bukl á homrum lá.
- The waterfall was thirty ells high⁴⁶
that the dragon lay under,
head and tail⁴⁷ on the ground and the bight⁴⁸ on the crags.
119. Tríati alin var fossurin,
ið ormurin undir lá,
uppi vóru bæði bøksl,
og búkur á hamri lá.
- The waterfall was thirty ells high
that the dragon lay under,
both forelimbs⁴⁹ were up in the air,⁵⁰ and the stomach lay on the crag.

44 This means literally “reach the earth,” which we assume means he should lie down in the soil.

45 Benjarkolvur is a heiti for sword used in the ballads.

46 “High” is understood in the Faroese. An “ell” is an older measurement used in northern Europe, understood as the length of a man’s arm from the elbow to the fingertips. This is traditionally understood as being around eighteen inches (45.7 cm), although the measurement was later standardized in different countries to a variety of different lengths.

47 Sporl is the same word used for fishtail.

48 The bight where the body of the dragon curves into a loop.

49 Bøksl means the front flipper of a whale.

50 We have added “in the air” for clarity here. If the head and tail are on the ground but the body is on the crag, it would imply the dragon is hanging in the air off the cliff.

120. Tað var hin snari Sjúrdur, sínnum svørði brá,
hann kleyv tann hin frænarorm sundur í lutir tvá.
- That was the swift⁵¹ Sjúrdur,
he brandished his sword,
he split that dragon Frænar⁵² apart in two pieces.
121. Vænt var tað høggið, ið Sjúrdur gav ta stund, tá skalv bæði leyv og lund
og øll vørildins grund.
- That blow was graceful, that Sjúrdur dealt in that moment, then both leaf and grove trembled
and all the foundations of the world.
122. Tá skalv bæði leyv og lund
og øll vørildins grund, Sjúrdur brá sín bitra brand,
hjó hann í fyra sundur.
- Then both leaf and grove trembled
and all the foundations of the world, Sjúrdur drew his sharp sword,⁵³ and hacked him apart into four.
123. Tá spurdi ormurin, i fjørbrótunum lá: “Hvør var so hin hugdjarvi, ið vega tordi so?”
- Then the dragon asked,
who lay in his death throes: “Who was the courageous one who dared to strike like that?” 124. “Sjúrða skalt tú nevna meg, Sigmundar son,
Hjørdis drottning
móðir nevnd var hon.”
- “You shall call me Sjúrdur, son of Sigmundur, Queen Hjørdis
my mother was named.”
125. “Hoyr tú tað nú, Sjúrdur, eg sigi tað til tín:
hvør fylgdi tær tann ringa veg higar nú til mín?”
- “Now listen, Sjúrdur,
I say this to you:
who accompanied you on the bad road here to me?”
126. “Regin er tín bróðir, hann vísti mær veg,
hann er tann versti svikarin, deyða vildi hann teg.”
- “Your brother Regin,
he showed me the way,
he is the worst traitor,
he wanted death for you.” 127. Til tess svaraði ormurin, meðan hann fleyt í blóði: “Drepa mást tú Regin smið, hóast hann er mín bróðir.
- The dragon answered to that,
while he was drenched in blood: “You have to kill Regin the smith, even though he is my brother.

51 Snarur can also mean brave. When it occurs with Sjúrdur, functioning almost as a by-name, we have used “swift.”

52 Frænarorm is not presented as a name in the edition here, but it clearly refers to the dragon Frænar.

53 Brandur is a heiti used for sword in ballads.

128. Veg tú nú Regin smið, sum tú hefur vigið meg, hann er verstí svikarin, deyða vil sjálfvan teg.”
- Slay Regin the smith
as you have slain me,
he is the worst traitor,
he wants death even for you.” 129. Stokti hann hjartað, vegin var so trongur, tríati alin
var teinurinn langur.
- He roasted the heart,⁵⁴
the road was so narrow, the spit was thirty ells long.
130. Sjúrður gjörðist um hendur heitur,
drap sær í munn,
fluglar og allskyns djór vórðu honum á máli kunnig.
- Sjúrður’s hands got hot,⁵⁵
he stuck them in his mouth, he began to understand the language of birds and all kinds of animals.⁵⁶ 131. Tað var tá Regin smiður, talaði so fyrri sær: “Fái eg tað nú, Sjúrður, ið tú lovaði mær?”
- Then it was Regin the smith, speaking to himself like this: “Sjúrður, do I now get that which you promised me?” 132. Tá svaraðu vípurnar, uppi sótu í eik: “Sjálvur skalt tú, Sjúrður, eta tína steik.”
- Then the lapwings answered, that sat in the oak: “Sjúrður, you should eat your roast yourself.” 133. Át hann hjartað,
av teininum dró,
Regin legðist at drekka
ormins eiturblood.
- He ate the heart
that he drew off the spit, Regin lay down to drink
the poisonous blood of the dragon.
134. Regin legðist at drekka
ormins eiturblood,
Sjúrður gav honum banasár í spori, sum hann stóð.
- Regin lay down to drink
the poisonous blood of the dragon, Sjúrður gave him a deadly wound where he stood in the track.⁵⁷

54 Sjúrður is the one roasting the heart here.

55 I.e., he is burning himself. In Icelandic sources this is because he touches the meat to see whether it is done.

56 Although it does not explicitly say this in the ballad, in Old Norse tradition it is the blood of the dragon that Sjúrður inadvertently licks off his hands at this point that enables him to understand the birds.

57 Previously Regin was depicted as lying down. Now, suddenly, he appears to be standing. This is due to the needs of the rhyme.

135. Tað var hin snari Sjúrdur,
sínnum svørði brá,
síðan kleyv hann Regin smið sundur í lutir tvá.

That was the swift Sjúrdur,
he drew his sword,
then he split Regin the smith apart into two pieces.⁵⁸

136. Mikið mundi Sjúrdur
gullið ognast tá,
tí hann vá tann frænarorm,
á Glitraheiði lá.

Then Sjúrdur acquired a lot of gold,
because he slew the dragon Frænar that lay on Glitrarheiði

137. Árla var um morgunin, áðrenn upp rann sól, bant hann á Grana bak gullkistur tólv.

Early in the morning,
before the sun came up, he tied on Grani's back twelve chests of gold.

138. Tólv gullkistur
hvørjumegin klakk,
Sjúrdur settist omaná,
og so er frásagt.

Twelve chests of gold
on each side of the horse, Sjúrdur sat himself on top,
that's how it's told.

139. Tólv gullkistur hvørjumegin á, Sjúrdur leyp á lendar,
og vreiður var Grani tá.

Twelve chests of gold
on each side,
Sjúrdur leapt on the back, and Grani was resentful⁵⁹ then.

140. Tólv gullkistur
hvørjumegin klakk,
sprakk hann yvir Lindará, so er frásagt.

Twelve chests of gold
on each side of the horse,
he leapt over Lindará,
that's how it's told.

141. Grani sprakk um díkið, sýlgjan sundur gekk,
tað er mær av sonnum sagt,
at Nornagestur hana fekk.

Grani leapt over the dyke,
the buckle burst apart, it has been told to me truthfully that Nornagestur got it.

142. Nú skal lata ljóði av, eg kvøði ikki longur á sinni,
nú skal taka upp annan tátt
og víðari leggja í minni.

Now I shall end my song,
I sing no longer at present,
now to begin the second part of the ballad
and continue to remember it.

Refrain Grani bar gullið av heiði, brá hann sínnum brandi av reiði,
Sjúrdur vann av orminum,
Grani bar gullið av heiði.

*Grani carried the gold from the heath,
he brandished his blade in a fury,
Sjúrdur defeated the dragon,
Grani carried the gold from the heath.*

58 The words used here to describe Regin being chopped in two recall the words used to describe the two pieces of the sword and the splitting of the anvil.

59 Vreiður can also mean “angry” or “irate.”

THE BALLAD OF BRYNHILD (BRYNHILDAR TÁTTUR)

1. Eg veit eina rímuna, Buðla skulum vær kalla, hon er bæði mild og mæt, um Hákungun synir allar.

I know of a ballad,
we shall call him Buðli, it is both pleasant and powerful,¹ about all of Hákungun's sons.²

Refrain Grani bar gullið av heiði,
brá hann sínum brandi av reiði,
Sjúrdur vann av orminum,
Grani bar gullið av heiði.

*Grani carried the gold from the heath,
he brandished his blade in a fury,
Sjúrdur defeated the dragon,
Grani carried the gold from the heath.*

2. Kongur ræður fyrri langa lund, bjarti Buðlin kallast, tívin telur málmaring við sínar hirðir allar.

A king rules a tall grove,³ he is called fair Buðlin, the chieftain counts armoured nobles⁴ amongst all his retinue.⁵

3. Árla var um morgunin, tímin tað til bar,
sjálvur er gingin Buðlin kongur í sín dótturs sal.

It was early in the morning, the time was right,⁶ King Buðlin himself goes into his daughter's hall.⁷

1 "It" here refers to the ballad or story itself.

2 Hákungun here is a synonym for king. In other variants, such as variants Bb and D (Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 64, st. 3; vol. 1, p. 114, st. 1), it says Júka synir (sons of Júki). Júki is Gjúki in Old Norse, King of the Burgundians, head of the clan the Gjúkungar, father of Gunnarr, Hogni, Guðormr, and Guðrún. In Matras' edition of Schrøter, it noted that the Haaguns of the manuscript has been corrected to Gjúka by Lyngbye. Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, p. 10, line 4n.

3 This could also be a long grove; it is referring to his kingdom or land.

4 A málmari is an armoured soldier in the ballads. Málmaringar is also found in variant Bb (Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 64, st. 4) and málmaring in variant D (Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 114, st. 5). In Matras' edition of Schrøter, it says Mölm Aar Ring. Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, p. 10, st. 2. Lyngbye however cannot make sense of this and believes it to mean Malm aa Rhin (Rhinens malm), meaning "gold, money." Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 127–28n2. In this interpretation, the king would be counting money with his followers. Hammershaimb, on the other hand, has málm og ring (metal and ring). Hammershaimb, Sjúrdar Kvæði, p. 16, st. 3.

5 The hirð is a retinue, which is a body of people (usually understood to be men) retained in the service of a noble, here king. Cf. the hirðkonur (lit. female retainers) who attend to Hjórdis in Regin smiður, st. 25.

6 This means it was a good opportunity for the king to visit his daughter because it was early.

7 It is unclear how this stanza got into the edition of variant A (translated here) in Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1. It is not in the edition of the manuscript by Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, nor is it in Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder.

It is, however, very close to st. 11 in variant E of Brynhildar táttur. Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 146: “Tað var um ein halgan dag, / ið tímin hartil bar, / gingin var hann Buðli kongur / í sín dótturs sal.” This version was recorded by Hammershaimb from Hans Johanneson (Sandur, Sandoy). Chesnutt and Larsen, History, Manuscripts, Indexes, 79. However, it is not in Hammershaimb, Sjúðar Kvæði.

8 Bragdartáttur is also cited in Høgnar táttur as a source. Lyngbye interprets bragdartáttur to be the name of a lost ballad and suggests it could be the same lay as Guðrúnarbrögð hin fornu, mentioned in the Old Icelandic Nornagests þáttur. Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 41–42. It could, however, be a reference to tales of admirable deeds as told in the kappakvæði (heroic ballads), especially those in the Bragdar tættir in the Karlamagnusar kvæði. See Grundtvig and Bloch, “Bragdar Tættir” (although the content of those tættir do not have to do with this one). Cf. the words bradgagerð and bradgaligur (heroic or valorous deeds) and bragdamenni (hero).

9 This is expressing that Brynhild is brighter than the sun, and that the sun becomes like a shadow when it is close to or compared to her.

10 She is rejecting suitors.

11 Skinn, literally meaning “hide,” sometimes means “cloak” in ballads.

12 Høgaloft is a private chamber on the second floor. Cf. st. 27 of Regin smiður when Hjördis gives birth in the høgaloft.

13 List, translated here as cleverness, means clever in a cunning way. It could potentially have magical connotations and can also mean “art” or “artifice.”

9. “Hoyr tað, mín hin sæla dóttir,
sig mær satt ífrá:
ríður so nakar higar í dag,
ið tín stár hugur á?”
- “Listen, my dear daughter,
tell me truthfully:
Is there anyone riding here¹⁴ today that you would find appealing?” 10. Ríður so nakar higar í dag, ið tín stár hugur á,
var hann ei tín onkabróðir, hann skuldi tú fáa.”
- If there is anyone riding here today that you find appealing, if he wasn’t your own beloved brother,¹⁵ you would have him.” 11. “Hoyr tað nú, mín sæli faðir, eg sigi tær satt ífrá:
so ríður eingin higar í dag, ið mín stár hugur á.”
- “Now listen, my dear father,
I tell you truthfully:
No one is riding here today that I find appealing.” 12. “Hvør leingi vilt tú, mín sæla dóttir, elva mær tann vanda,
at tú noktar hvørjum manni, ið tær býðst til handa?”
- “How long will you, my dear daughter, continue to cause me such worry, that you refuse every man that offers you their hand?” 13. Hvør leingi vilt tú, mín sæla dóttir, eyka mær ta sorg,
at tú noktar hvønn at eiga, higar kemur í borg?”
- How long will you, my dear daughter, increase my sorrow,
that you refuse to marry anyone that comes here to this castle?” 14. “Sjúrður eitur sá maður, Sigmundar son,
tað tykti mær vera mín sámi at vera hansara kona.”
- “Sjúrður is the name of that man, Sigmundur’s son,
that seemed to me to be fitting for me to be his wife.” 15. “Undarliga hevur tú tær ástirnar við tær mett, at tú unnar manni tann, ið tú hevur ikki sætt.”
- “You have strangely chosen your love,
that you love a man who you have not seen.” 16. “Tað hava mær nornir skapt, viti tað Gud og menn, níggju vetur unti eg Sjúrða, ósæddan enn.”
- “The Norns¹⁶ shaped this for me, both God and men know, that for nine winters¹⁷ I have loved Sjúrður, though still unseen.

14 Higar is an adverb of direction and means “to here, hither.” See also, for example, stt. 10 and 11.

15 Onkabróðir is a favourite brother that you love more than the others. This is from Old Norse einka- in compounds, denoting something special or particular.

16 The norns are female beings in Old Norse mythology who shape human destinies.

17 This is used to signify “a very long time.”

17. Tað hava mær nornir skapt, ligger í brósti trá,
níggju vetur Sjúrða unga, eg ei við eygum sá.”
- The Norns shaped this for me, a desire in my breast,
nine winters young Sjúrður,
I didn't see with my eyes.”
18. Til tess svaraði kongurin, hann drekkur tann mjøðin reina: “Hvat er hann Sjúrður frægari enn aðrir danisveinar?”
- To that the king answered,
he drinks the pure mead:
“How is Sjúrður better than other honourable men?¹⁸ 19. Hoyr nú, mín hin sæla dóttir, so sigi eg tær enn:
hvat er hann Sjúrður frægari
enn aðrir kongins menn?”
- Listen, my dear daughter,
I say to you once again:
how is Sjúrður better than others of the king's men?” 20. “Tað er hann Sjúrður frægari
enn aðrir kongins menn, tí hann fellir heidningarnar, hundrað um í senn.
- “This is how Sjúrður is better than the others of the king's men, because he is killing the heathens, a hundred in one go.¹⁹
21. Tað er hann Sjúrður frægari
enn aðrir danisveinar,
saðil hans og hestbúni
tað glógvar sum gullið reina.
- This is how Sjúrður is better than other honourable men, his saddle and tack shine like pure gold.
22. Tað er hann Sjúrður frægari fram fyri aðrar garpar, saðil hans og teymarnir tað glógvar av gulli bjarta.
- This is how Sjúrður is better than other warriors, his saddle and bridle shine of bright gold.
23. Hoyrt havi eg frásagt, ikki var eg hjá,
tá ið hann ormin á Glitrarheiði við sínum svørði vá.
- I have heard it told,
I was not present,
when he slew the dragon on Glitrarheiði with his sword.

18 A danimaður is a gentleman or man of honour. It is likely referring back to st. 2, which refers to the king's retinue, although the context here is the suitors.

19 This line is formulaic and found in other ballads in the context of killing a lot of people in one go.

24. Hoyrt havi eg frásagt tí sama sjáldna bragdi, hvussu hann tann frænarorm við svørði niður lagdi.
 I have heard it told,
 in the same remarkable deed, how he felled the dragon Frænir²⁰
 with his sword.
25. Mikið mundi Sjúrdur
 gullið ognast tá,
 tí hann vá tann frænarorm,
 á Glitrarheiði lá.
 Sjúrdur acquired
 a great quantity of gold, when he slew the dragon Frænir, who lay on Glitrarheiði.
26. Tólv gullkistur
 hvørjumegin klakk
 bant hann tað á Grana bak, so er mær frásagt.”
 Twelve chests of gold
 on each side of the horse
 he tied to Grani’s back, so I’ve been told.”
27. “Hoyr tú, mín hin sæla dóttir, legg nú til tess ráð,
 hvussu vit skulu tann mikla mann av øðrum londum fáa!” “Listen, my dear daughter,
 tell me the plan,²¹
 how we will get that great man to come here from other lands!” 28. “Tú skalt lata mær salin byggja, í oyðimark so gera,
 við so lítlari tænastru
 skal eg har inni vera.
 “You must build a hall for me,
 in a deserted place,
 with so few attendants
 I shall be in there.
29. Og so miklan váðaloga lat tú harum gera,
 sum teir kunnu dvørgar tveir mest við rúnum skera.
 And have such a mighty wall of fire²² surround it,
 as good as two dwarves
 could carve with runes.²³ 30. Hesin sami váðalogi hann man meg so varða, har man eingin ríða á uttan Sjúrdur snari.”
 This same perilous wall of fire will protect me, no one may ride through it except the swift Sjúrdur.”

20 We have chosen to interpret Frænar as a personal name and as obviously the dragon Fávnr. However, Hammershaimb and Jakobsen gloss frænarormur as a glistening dragon or snake. Hammershaimb and Jakobsen, Færøsk anthologi, vol. 2, p. 76. Matras interprets Frænar as a personal name. Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, 89.

21 Her father is asking her for advice and wants to discuss this with her. He wants her ideas on how she is going to make Sjúrdur come to them.

22 This is a perilous fire surrounding her bower.

23 The dwarves create the wall of fire with runes.

31. Hann læt henni salin tann í oyðimark so gera,
við so lítlari tænastru
hon skuldi harí vera.
- He built her that hall
in a deserted place,
with so few attendants
she should stay in there.
32. Og so miklan váðaloga læt hann harum gera, sum teir kundu dvørgar tveir mest við rúnnum skera.
- And had such a mighty wall of fire
surround it,
as good as two dwarves
could carve with runes.²⁴ 33. Og so miklan váðaloga læt hann harum slá, ei mundu dvørgarnir
við svikunum ná.
- And he had such a mighty wall of fire made around there,²⁵
the dwarves were not able to succeed with any trickery.
34. Og so miklan váðaloga læt hann harum vera,
ikki máttu dvørgarnir
burtur við rúnnum bera.
- And such a mighty wall of fire he had there be around there, the dwarves could not take it away with runes.²⁶ 35. Stríða teir í Húnalandi við útdragin knív, hevur so mangur edilingur fyri kvinnur latið lív.
- They fight in Húnaland²⁷ with unsheathed knives, so many noble men have lost their lives for women.²⁸
36. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin skín so víða,
tað vóru teir Húnakongar,
teir búðu seg út at ríða.
- It was early in the morning,
the sun shines far and wide, as the Hunnish kings
readied themselves to ride.
37. Tað vóru teir Húnakongar, búðu seg út at ríða, frægari vóru Júkagarpar, nú ið teir komu at stríða.
- It was the Hunnish kings, readying themselves to ride, better were Júki's warriors, now that they come to battle.

24 Here the narrator echoes Brynhild's command in st. 29.

25 The dwarves have built the wall of fire with rune magic.

26 The dwarves are not able to take the fire made with rune magic away.

27 Húnaland is the land of the Huns. The Huns were the enemies of the Burgundians, the Gjúkingar (Gunnarr and his brothers). In the Völsung legend, their sister Guðrún marries Atila the Hun (Atli) after having been married to Sigurðr (the Faroese Sjúrdur), but Guðrún later kills Atli.

28 Stt. 35, 36, and 37 have nothing to do really with the immediate action of the ballad, but they do relate to the wider Völsung legend.

38. Árla var um morgunin, sólin skín í fjøll,
tað ríður so mangur edilingur í Buðla kongins høll.
It was early in the morning,
the sun shines on the mountains, so many a noble man rides to King Buðli's hall.
39. Árla var um morgunin sólin bráar í brún, ríða so frægir edilingar
í Buðla kongins tún.
It was early in the morning
the sun shines on the horizon, such valiant nobles ride to King Buðli's courtyard.
40. Ríða so mangir edilingar
í Buðla kongins tún, Brynhild situr í Hildarstóli, hon ber gull á brún.
So many noble men ride
to King Buðli's courtyard, Brynhild sits on the Hildarstólur, she wears gold on her brows.²⁹ 41. Buðlin kongur í salin gongur, beiðir frúgv við svari:
"Komin er hann Gunnar kongur niðan úr Júkagarði.
King Buðlin walks into the hall, asks the lady for an answer:
"King Gunnar has come from Júki's court.
42. Hoyr tú, Brynhild dóttir mín, gera skalt tú tað,
komin er hann Gunnar kongur, honum sigur tú ja."
Listen, Brynhild my daughter, you will do this,³⁰
King Gunnar has come,
you will say yes to him." 43. Buðlin kongur á gólvi stendur styðjar seg við borð, Brynhild unga dóttir hans hon talar ikki eitt orð.
King Buðlin stands on the floor leaning on the table,³¹ Brynhild his young daughter she doesn't speak a word.
44. Brynhild seg úr stóli lyfti, glógvar í gulli reyð, skundaði sær av Buðlins borg, hon gongur á Hildarheyg.
Brynhild rises herself from the chair,
she shines with red gold, hurrying away from Buðlin's castle, she goes to Hildarheygur.
45. Grímur og Høgnar Júkason teir møttust á grønum vølli, moyar hvukku í Hildarsali, nú skelvur høga Buðlins høll.
Grímur and Høgnar Júkason
they clashed in a green field, maidens were startled in Hildarsalur, now Buðlin's high hall trembles.

29 She is wearing a crown.

30 He is telling her she will obey him.

31 The intention here is to show him threatening her.

46. Grímur og Høgnar Júkason teir slógust við bitrum brandi, Brynhild situr í váðaloga mitt í faðirs síns landi
Grímur and Høgnar Júkason
they fought with sharp swords, Brynhild sits within the wall of fire in the middle of her father's land.
47. Settist aftur í gyltan stól, hon smálist undir lín: “Hvør ið heldur á váðalogan, hann skal verða mín.”
Sat down again on the gilded throne, she smiles under her linen:³² “He who rides through the wall of fire shall be mine.”
48. Brynhild situr í gyltum stóli, tað hitt væna vív,
dregur hon Sjúrd av Norðlondum
í Hildarhegy til sín.
Brynhild sits on the gilded throne,
that beautiful woman,
she draws Sjúrdur from the northern lands to her in Hildarhegyur.³³ 49. Brynhild situr í Hildarhegy, tað hitt væna vív,
dregur hon Sjúrd av Norðlondum
sær til sorgartíð.
Brynhild sits in Hildarhegyur,
that beautiful woman,
she draws Sjúrdur from the northern lands to her to times of sorrow.³⁴ 50. Ein dag frættir Sjúrdur burtur í onnur lond: Brynhild svevur á Hildarhegyggi, hon er biðlavond.
One day Sjúrdur hears news away in other lands:³⁵ Brynhild sleeps on Hildarhegyur, she rejects suitors.
51. Sjúrdur reið út árla morgun, ei hans fostra visti,
eingin veit á morgni at siga, hvar ið hann á kvöldi gistir.
Sjúrdur rode out early in the morning, his foster-mother didn't know,³⁶ no one knows in the morning, where they will stay in the evening.³⁷

32 Brynhild being under the linen could signify she is dressed in a bridal headdress ready to be married. The headwear of a bride on the wedding day was made of linen, hence Old Norse ganga und líni, “to be wedded.” See Wikman, “Bröllop,” 315. In other ballads this is, however, less obviously the case, since sometimes men are said to be “smiling under linen,” which may only be added to provide a parallel to surrounding stanzas in which women are “smiling under linen,” wearing a female headdress.

33 Brynhild draws Sjúrdur to her by magic.

34 Times of sorrow is not what she is planning but rather the effect—times of sorrow will follow. This is a flashforward in the story.

35 He is abroad, away from home, when he hears the news about Brynhild.

36 It was so secret that he left that even his foster-mother did not know. Usually, Sjúrdur is depicted as having a foster-father, and this is how Lyngbye interprets the line, glossing the figure as Hjalprek. Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 148n. However, the form is feminine. It could also mean “foster-daughter,” but it is not clear who this would be.

37 This is a common saying in the ballads.

52. Sjúrdur reið út árla morgun, gyrði seg við horni,
har sótu tveir villini fuglar á einum summarsmorgni.
- Sjúrdur rode out early in the morning, girded himself with a horn,³⁸
there sat two wild birds on a summer morning.
53. Ein dag tóku fuglarnir at mæla millum sín: “Brynhild svevur á Hildarheyggi, og hagar væntar hon tín.”
- One day the birds
started talking between themselves: “Brynhild sleeps on Hildarheygur, and there she’s expecting you.” 54. Ein dag tóku fuglarnir ímillum sín at mæla: “Brynhild situr á Hildarheyggi, hagar man Sjúrdur fara.”
- One day the birds
started talking between themselves: “Brynhild sits on Hildarheygur, Sjúrdur will go there.” 55. Enn tá frætti Sjúrdur, um Húnaland hann fór: Brynhild situr í sínum sali, hon er so heitstór.
- Even then Sjúrdur heard,
as he travelled in Húnaland: Brynhild sits in her hall, she is so haughty
56. Sjúrdur kvittar at ríða á Buðla kongins land, gullibúnar handskarnar teir dregur hann sær á hond.
- Sjúrdur leaves to ride to King Buðli’s lands, the gold-threaded gloves
he pulls them on his hands.
57. Tólv gullringar
hevði hann har íhjá, drottningröngin
reyða omaná.
- Twelve gold rings
he had with him,
and the red ring of the queen as well.
58. Tólv gullringar
dregur hann sær á hond, síðan kvittar nýtur drongur
á Buðla kongins land.
- Twelve rings of gold
he puts on his arms, then the brave young man leaves for King Buðli’s land.
59. So gongur hann Grani grótið so sum sand, eingin kemur tílíkur
á Buðla kongins land.
- Grani walks across
rocks as well as sand,
an equal to him will never come to King Buðli’s land.
60. So gongur hann Grani í gróti sum á vølli, slíkur kemur ikki aftur á Buðla kongins fjøll.
- Grani walks across
rocks as well as fields, such a horse won’t return to King Buðli’s mountains.

38 This is possibly a signalling horn.

61. Hann reið sær so niðarlaga við Júkagørðum fram, úti stóð frúgv Grimhild við so miklan mann. He rode down so closely by Júki's court, Lady Grimhild stood outside with mighty men.
62. Úti stóð hon Grimhild við so mangan mann, tí hon vildi forvit[η]ast, hvar ið Sjúrdur ríður fram. Grimhild stood outside³⁹ with so many men, because she was curious about where Sjúrdur rode to.
63. Gjarna vil hon síggja tað, hvar ið Sjúrdur ríður fram, hon sá ikki á hestbaki ein tíguligari mann. She would like to see, where Sjúrdur rode to,
she hadn't seen on horseback a more magnificent man.
64. "Sjúrdur, støða tínari ferð og tala við meg,
eg eigi mær so væna dóttur, við ástir vil leiða teg. "Stop your journey Sjúrdur and speak with me,
I have such a beautiful daughter, who wants to love you."⁴⁰ 65. Tú ger væl, snarpi Sjúrdur, tú snakka vilt við meg, eg eigi mær so eina dóttur, við ástum leiðir hon teg." You do well, brave Sjúrdur, that you want to speak with me, I have such a daughter,
she wants to love you."⁴¹ 66. "Eg stilli ikki mínari ferð, meðan mín gangari rennur,
eg fari mær á heyggin fram,
sum váðalogin brennur. "I won't stop my journey, while my steed runs,
I am going to the mound,
where the wall of fire burns.
67. Eg støðgi ikki mínari ferð, mín gangari rennur so strítt,
eg fari mær á heyggin fram
at finna tað væna vív. I won't stop my journey, my steed runs so fast,
I am going to the mound
to find the beautiful woman."⁴² 68. Eg støði ikki mínari ferð, mín gangari rennur í lund,
eg fari mær á heyggin fram
at skoða tað væna sprund." I won't stop my journey, my steed runs in a grove,
I am going to the mound
to see the beautiful woman."⁴³

39 Úti stóð is a formulaic thing to say. She is waiting for him.

40 This is a parallel to Brynhild—they both fall in love with him without seeing him.

41 She wants to marry him.

42 Vív is a heiti for a woman.

43 Sprund is also a heiti for a woman, and therefore mirrors the end of the stanza above.

69. Sjúrdur klæðist árla morgun, hann fór í brynju víða: “Eg havi so lítið ørindi í Eysturlond at ríða.” Sjúrdur is getting dressed early one morning, he went in a large coat of mail.⁴⁴
“I have a small errand
I have to ride to the eastern lands.”⁴⁵
70. Tað er enn sum ofta fyrr, biðlar fara at fríggja, eingin tordi longur fram enn váðalogan at síggja.
It is yet like often times before, suitors go to woo,
no one dared to go further at the sight of the wall of fire.⁴⁶ 71. Merkismaður orðum talar, tungan mælir inna:
“Hvør ið heldur á váðalogan, hann skal ta jomfrú vinna.”
An outstanding man⁴⁷ speaks these words,
saying:
“He who crosses the wall of fire, will win the maiden.” 72. Grímur ríður á grønum vølli, kinn ber hann so baldan, hann vendi sín hest frá váðaloga, hann skuldi í bálið halda.
Grímur rides on the green field,⁴⁸ his cheeks are so bold,⁴⁹
he turned his horse away from the wall of fire, as he was going to cross the fire.⁵⁰ 73. Sjúrdur frægi til orða tekur, frá man frættast víða: “Eg beri tað merki í mitt skjold, eg skal nú harí ríða.”
Brave Sjúrdur began to speak, it was told far and wide:⁵¹
“I bear that emblem on my shield,⁵²
I will now ride through.”

44 He is wearing a large coat of armour.

45 Here the Faroese writes Eysturlond like it is a country with a capital letter, but we have chosen to translate it as “eastern lands.”

46 The suitors hesitate when they see the wall of fire, and they turn back.

47 A merkismaður is an excellent man with power and influence, and it is a word often used in obituaries. It could, in this context, also mean a flag- or standard-bearer.

48 In st. 45, Grímur clashes with Høgnar.

49 Baldur can also mean “fair,” and in this context implies that he has a brave-looking face.

50 In this stanza there are two different words for fire. Logi refers more to individual flames, while bál refers to something like a bonfire.

51 This is a formulaic phrase often used in ballads.

52 Although this is opaque in the ballad, we hear about this in the Icelandic Völsunga saga: “Hans skjöldur var margfaldr ok laugaðr í rauðu gulli ok skrifaðr á einn dreki. Hann var ðokkbrúnaðr it efra, en fagrauðr it neðra, ok þann veg var markaðr hans hjálmr ok sǫðull ok vápnrokk. Hann hafði gullbrynjuna, ok ǫll hans vápn váru gulli búin. Ok því var dreki markaðr á hans vápnnum ǫllum at, er hann er sénn, má vita hvern þar ferr af ǫllum þeim er frétt hafa at hann drap þann mikla dreka er Væringjar kalla Fáfni. Ok fyrir því eru vápn hans ǫll gulli búin ok brún at lit, at hann er langt

74. Eingin reið á Brynhilduheyg uttan Sjúrdur snari,
gjøgnum royk og váðaloga, hann og hestur hans Grani. None rode onto Brynhilduheygur⁵³ but the swift Sjúrdur,
through smoke and the wall of fire,
he and his horse Grani.
75. So steig tá Grani á foldunum fast,
innarlaga í heygginum tað hóvsporið brast. Grani leaps so firmly over the ground,
well up on to the mound that the hoofbeats were thundering.
76. So stígur Grani drístuliga fram,
heitur var tann eldurin, Sjúrða um lendar brann. Grani strode so boldly forward,
the fire was hot,
it burnt around Sjúrdur's loins.
77. Og so stígur Grani gjøgnum tann roykin svarta, hann kom at tí portrinum, tað skín sum gullið bjarta. Grani strode through the black smoke, he came to the gate
that shines like brilliant gold.
78. Sjúrdur reið tann váðaloga, ið eingin vágdi fyrr,
og við sínum svørðinum, tá kleyv hann niður dyr. Sjúrdur rode through the wall of fire that no one had dared to before, and with his sword,
he split down the door.
79. Og við sínum svørðinum klývur hann lokur frá, sá hann, hvar ið Buðlins dóttir eina í songum lá. And with his sword he splits off the latch, there he saw where Buðli's daughter lay alone in bed.
80. Sjúrdur frægi í salin gongur, víða um seg hyggur,
sær hann, hvar tað væna vív eina í songum liggur. Brave Sjúrdur went into the quarters, looking all around,
he sees there the beautiful woman lying alone in bed.

umfram aðra menn at kurteisi ok allri hœfersku ok nálíga at ǫllum hlutum.” (His shield was of many thicknesses. It was plated with gold, on it was pictured a dragon. Its upper part was dark brown, and its lower light red, and his helm, saddle and surcoat were emblazoned in the same way. His hauberk was of gold, and all his weapons were decked with gold. And the reason for the dragon being emblazoned on all his weapons was so that all those who had heard that he'd killed the great dragon the Værings called Fafnir, would know on seeing him who he was. And the reason for his weapons being all decked with gold and gleaming bright was that he far excelled others in fine manners, in all the social graces and well-nigh in everything). Finch, Völsunga Saga, 40–41.

53 Up on to the mound.

81. Hann sá, hvar tað væna vív í herklæðunum svav, Sjúrður tók sín bitra brand, hann sprettir brynju av. He saw where the beautiful woman was sleeping in armour, Sjúrður took his sharp sword, he splits the mail coat open.
82. Upp vaknaði Brynhild, hon hyggin um seg leit: “Hvør átti tann búgvín brand, ið brynju av mær beit?” Brynhild woke up, she looked around curiously: “Who owned that splendid sword that cut my mail coat open?” 83. Upp vaknaði Brynhild, víða um seg sær: “Hvør er tann hin djarvi drongur, ið brynju sprettir av mær?” Brynhild woke up,
looking all around,
“Who is that courageous hero who is splitting the mail coat open?” 84. “Riðin eri eg av Norðlondum higar nú til tín, Sjúrður Sigmundar sonur, veldiga søta mín. “I have ridden from the northern lands all the way to you, Sjúrður son of Sigmundur my magnificent⁵⁴ sweet one.
85. Sjúrða skalt tú nevna meg, Sigmundar svein,
Hjørdis drottningin
hon bar meg í heim.” You shall call me Sjúrður, Sigmundur’s son,
the queen Hjørdis brought me into the world.” 86. Brynhild setist upp undir seg, smílist undir lín:
“Ver vælkomin av øðrum londum, Sjúrður, søtin mín!” Brynhild sat up, smiled to herself under the linen: “Welcome from other lands, Sjúrður, my sweet one!
87. Hoyr tú tað nú, Sjúrður, hvør vísti tær leið
gjøgnum royk og váðaloga, at tú higar reið?” Now listen, Sjúrður, who showed you the route
through smoke and the wall of fire, so that you rode here?” 88. “Ørnin á kvisti
bíðaði hon mín,
hon vísti mær vegin
higar heim til tín.” “The eagle on the branch waited for me,
she showed me the way
here, home to you.”⁵⁵

54 He’s impressed, as she is mighty.

55 This is an anthropomorphized eagle. In Völsunga saga, ch. 25, Sigurðr sees Brynhildr for the first time because his hawk lands on her tower and he goes to fetch it and sees her within, embroidering a picture of his heroic deeds. Finch, Völsunga Saga, 42. This is not the episode with the wall of fire.

89. “Hoyr tú, Sjúrdur sæti mín, ver nú ei so bráð,
gakk tær heldur til mín faðir, tak av honum ráð!”
- “Listen, Sjúrdur my sweet, don’t be so hasty.
go rather to my father, ask for his decision.”⁵⁶ 90. “Tú hefur so leingi, frúgv Brynhild, stundað heim til vár, eg fari ei til tín sæla faðir, taki ei av honum ráð.
- “You have for so long, lady Brynhild, been longing to come home to us, I will not go to your dear father, will not ask for his decision.
91. Tú hefur so leingi, frúgv Brynhild, stundað á mítt fund,
tað søgdu mær alsingarnir gjøgnum grønan lund.”
- You have so long, lady Brynhild, waited to meet me,
it was said to me by the birds,⁵⁷
through the green grove.” 92. Løgdu tey sínar ástir saman innan mentarfund, tá varð hon Ásla Sjúrdardóttir gitin á teirri stund.
- They fell in love
at that splendid meeting,⁵⁸ then Ásla Sjúrdardóttir was conceived at that moment.
93. Løgdu sínar ástir saman ytst við menjargátt, tá varð Ásla Sjúrdardóttir gitin á teirri nátt
- They fell in love
by the splendid front gate,⁵⁹ then Ásla Sjúrdardóttir was conceived that night.

56 He is to ask him if they can be married.

57 Lyngbye explains alsingarnir as “the singing birds.” Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 164n92.

58 The meaning of mentarfundur is unclear. It could be translated as mentar- (fine, splendid, or magnificent) and fundur, meaning “meeting” or “rendezvous,” as we have chosen here. Hammershaimb (Sjúrdar Kvæði, p. 24, st. 93) has við tãð mentar sprund for this line, where sprund is a poetic word for “woman,” and suggests in 24n2 that this could be menjarsprund, a word found in other ballads and which means a delightful or wonderful woman. Lyngbye has mentar Fund, and his interpretation is that this refers to Brynhild’s bower, with the magical flames around it, relating mentar to something like the Old Norse mennt (art, skill), referring to the artificial flames around Brynhild’s quarters. Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 164.

59 This literally means “outermost by the splendid door,” likely referring to the gate Sjúrdur goes through in st. 77. Menjar- references gold and ornaments (cf. Old Norse men, meaning “jewels, treasures” in the plural). It is used in many ballad words, such as menjarbaldur (chieftain or hero) and menjargrund (woman). Gátt means “doorway,” cf. út á ytstu gátt (to the front door). See Føroysk-ensk orðabók, s.v. “Ytstur.”

94. Allir teir í Buðlins høll lova tey onkaverka, innan fyri mentarfund bundu tey ástin sterka. All those in Buðlin's hall are praising the exceptional deed,⁶⁰ at the splendid meeting⁶¹ they fell deeply in love.⁶² 95. Blíðar legði hann armarnar yvir Brynhildu háls, eg svørji tann eið á mína trú, har búði ikki undir falsk. Gently he laid his arms over Brynhild's neck,
I swear an oath by all that is sacred,⁶³
there is no deceit.
96. Tólv gullringar
legði hann frúnni á fang, síðan legði hann omaná tann dýra drottningring. Twelve gold rings he laid in the lady's lap, then he laid as well
the precious ring of the queen.
97. Tólv gullringar
dró hann frúnni á hond:
"Hetta skal vera tað fyrsta elskógins band." Twelve gold rings he drew onto the lady's arm:
"This shall be the first bond of love."
98. Guðrun gekk á gullstólin,
tað hitt væna vív,
dró hon Sjúrd av Hildarheyg í Júkagarð til sín. Guðrun went to the gold throne,
that beautiful woman,
she drew Sjúrdur from Hildarheygur to Júki's court to herself.
99. Sjúrdur situr í stólinum, niður fyri seg sær:
"Hvat mundi Grimhild drottning vilja nú mær? Sjúrdur sits in the throne, looks down in front of himself:
"What was it that Queen Grimhild wanted with me?"
100. Brynhild, tak mær saðil og boksl, ringabrynju síða,
eg havi so lítið ørindi burt annarsstaðni at ríða." Brynhild, fetch me a saddle and bridle, a long coat of mail,
I have a small errand
to ride away to another place."

60 They are praising the exceptional deed of Sjúrdur riding through the wall of fire.

61 See st. 92, line 2n, for mentarfund.

62 This literally means that they forged strong bonds between them; they are bound deeply in love.

63 Cf. svørja á sína trú, swear by all that is sacred, see Føroysk-ensk orðabók, s.v. "Trú." Literally this means he is swearing an oath on his faith.

101. Til tess svaraði Brynhild, tekur um hjarta at køla: “Júkin kongur dóttur eigur, við ástir man teg mæla.”
- To this answered Brynhild,
her heart beginning to chill, “King Júkin has a daughter, she wants to love you.”⁶⁴ 102. “Tað tykir mær vera undarligt, at meg skal tað henda:
eg skal allar mínar ástir frá tær, Brynhild, venda.”
- “I think that is unlikely, that it should happen to me:
that I should turn all of my love from you, Brynhild.” 103. Til tess svaraði Brynhild av so miklum sút: “Ríð tú ikki tann niðara vegin við Júkagørðum út.
- To this answered Brynhild,
out of great stress: “Do not ride the lower road to the court of Júki.
104. Hoyr tú tað nú, Sjúrdur, eg gevi tær fingurgull, ríð tær ikki til Grimhildu, tí hon er av svikum full.”
- Now listen, Sjúrdur,
I give you finger-gold,⁶⁵
do not ride to Grimhild, because she is full of deceit.” 105. Tað var um ein árla morgun, hann frá Brynhildu reið, møtti hann hennara sæla faðir skamt frá sínari leið.
- It was early one morning,
he rode away from Brynhild, he met her dear father not far from his path
106. Sjúrdur situr á Grana baki, hugin ið hann vendi
hagar, sum hennara faðir var, har av vegnum rendi.
- Sjúrdur sits on Grani’s back, he turned his mind
to where her father was,
there off the road.
107. “Ver vælcomin, Sjúrdur, tú tørvt ei boðini senda, fullvæl veit eg tín forløg út, hvørt tær skal ganga til enda.
- “Welcome, Sjúrdur,
you need not send the message,
I know full well your destiny, how it will go for you in the end.”⁶⁶ 108. Tú manst vera á aldri ungar, lívið man tó tær tróta, tú manst ognast Guðruna, Brynhildu ikki njóta.
- You may be of a young age, but your life will still be short,
you will marry Guðrun,
and never have Brynhild.

64 This reflects the final lines of stt. 64 and 65, spoken by Grimhild.

65 “Finger-gold” is a ring.

66 Buðli, Brynhild’s father, is speaking this stanza and the two following.

109. Hevur tú Brynhildu tryggan lovað, If you have made a promise to Brynhild, væl manst tú tað halda, you ought to keep it, Guðrun blandar valmannadrykk, Guðrun mixes a drink of forgetfulness, tað man nú sýtir valda.” that will cause great sorrow.” 110. “Tað tykir mær vera undarligt, “I think that is unlikely, at meg skal tað henda: that it should happen to me:
 eg skal allar mínar ástir that I should turn all of my love frá Brynhildu venda.” from Brynhild.”⁶⁷ 111. “Hoyr tú tað nú, Sjúrdur, “Listen now, Sjúrdur, ger tú ei tann skamm, do not commit this shameful act, ríð tær ikki so niðarlaga do not ride so closely hjá Júkagørðum fram. to the court of Júki.
112. Ríð tú ikki tann niðara vegin Do not ride the lower road við Júkagarðar fram, to Júki’s court, ríð tær heldur í erva, rather ride the higher road, har hendir tær ongan skamm. there no shame will befall you.
113. Bæði heilur og happadur(!), Both healthy and lucky vit skiljast nú á sinni, we part now at this time, Sjúrdur, goym væl hesi orð, Sjúrdur, remember well these words, tú legg tey væl í minni.” commit them well to memory.” 114. Sjúrdur reið á skógvar burtur, Sjúrdur rode away in the woods, tyktist komin í váða, it seemed like he was in danger, hann sá tað hitt illa djór he saw that evil beast berjast við bógvar báðar. attack with both forelimbs.⁶⁸
115. Hann sá tað hitt illa djór He saw that evil beast berjast við bógvar báðar, attack with both forelimbs, eitur spýði, eldur goysti, spewing poison, vomiting fire, næstan stóð í váða. nearly in peril.
116. So hvarv tað hitt illa djór Then that evil beast⁶⁹ disappeared burtur úr Sjúrdar eygum, before Sjúrdur’s eyes, sær hann, hvar ið Grimhild situr, he sees where Grimhild sits, leikar við brondum beygum. playing with bended swords.⁷⁰

67 This is Sjúrdur speaking, and it mirrors st. 102, which he speaks to Brynhild.

68 The monster has big forearms and attacks with them both. This has associations with the dragon.

69 The evil beast seems to be Grimhild, who has shapeshifted.

70 It is not entirely clear what brondum beygum means. The critical edition of the manuscript has Braandun bejun. Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, p. 17, st. 114.

117. Hestin vilti hon undir honum, at hann kundi ekki ganga, hann gjørði, hann bæði beit og sló og helti til ymsar vangar. She bewitched the horse under him, so that he could not go on,
she⁷¹ made it so he both bit and kicked and threw his head in different directions.
118. Tað var hin ungi Sjúrdur, hann skuldi venda frá, Grimhild treiv í teymarnar, at hann skuldi ekki náa. That was the young Sjúrdur, he was trying to turn away, Grimhild grasped the reins, so that he couldn't.
119. Tað er satt, ið talað er, mong er konan eym,
tað er mæ'r av sonnum sagt,
hon tók í Grana teym. It is true what they say,⁷² many the woman is wretched,⁷³
it is truthfully told to me, she took hold of Grani's reins.
120. Tí svaraði Sjúrdur, kinn bar hann so balda:
"Eg veit so ongan av Húnamonnum, mínar teymar torir at halda." Then Sjúrdur answered, his cheeks are so bold:⁷⁴
"I know none of the men of the Huns, who dare to hold my reins."

Beygum could mean "bended, bent," or "beautiful." Lyngbye though reads this as baajun meaning "both"; Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 172–73. Brondum is the dat. pl. of brandur, and could mean "swords" or "fire, embers." Lyngbye reads it as "swords," rendering the words "both swords"; Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 172–73. Hammershaimb has væl lögd við bondum beyjum; Hammershaimb, Sjúrdar Kvæði, 27, st. 129, which he interprets as "smykket med pyntelige band" (adorned with decorative bands); Hammershaimb, Sjúrdar Kvæði, 158. The line is somewhat formulaic, and appears for example in Gongurólvs kvæði as bundan við bondum beygum; Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 587, st. 76. The translation "bended swords" in this ballad makes sense if this is reflective of something that could make magic, while if it is fire, it matches with the monster that could perhaps spew fire.

71 Here it seems that the edition in CCF has made a mistake, see Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 14. The editors have printed hann, which we have faithfully reproduced here. However, this does not make sense, and in the manuscript it is indeed Hoon "she" as we have translated here, see Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, p. 17, st. 115.

72 This is a formulaic line that appears in other ballads. It literally means something like "it's true as it's told."

73 Eymur can mean "wretched," but it can also mean "loving." In other variants of the ballad it refers to Guðrun's heartbreak, so we have chosen "wretched" here.

74 He is also described this way in st. 72. It means he has a brave-looking face.

121. “Tú stöðga tín hest eina lítla stund, og snakka við meg,
eg eigi mæ'r eina væna dóttur, við ástir leiðir hon teg.
- “Stop your horse for a little while,
and speak with me,
I have a beautiful daughter, she wants to love you.⁷⁵” 122. So er Guðrun dóttir mín, hvar ið hon gongur inn, rósur og so liljur
tær skyggja av hennara kinn.”
- Such is Guðrun my daughter, wherever she goes,
roses and lilies shine from her cheeks.” 123. “Guðrun hon er dóttir tín, tað er tí ei betur,
hon er ekki Brynhildar líki, summar ímót vetur.”
- “Guðrun she is your daughter, it is therefore no better, she is not Brynhild’s equal, summer against winter.” 124. Út kom frúgvín Guðrun í einum stakki blá,
flættað hár á herðar lá,
við silkibondum smá.
- Out comes the lady Guðrun in a blue gown,⁷⁶
braided hair lay on her shoulders, with small silk ribbons.
125. Guðrun so til orða tekur, tungu bar hon snjalla: “Hava tað, ið annar eigur, tað man lukkast valla.
- Guðrun began to speak,
she was so eloquent: “To have that which another has,⁷⁷
that will hardly go well.
126. Nógvir eru í várum londum kongasynir og jallar, girnast tann, ið onnur eigur, tað man lukkast sjáldan.”
- There are many in our lands kings’ sons and earls, to covet that which another has that will rarely go well.” 127. Hon hevði upp sína høggru hond, gav henni hogg á tenn,
blóðið dreiv í barmin niður, sóu tað mangir menn.
- She raised her right hand, hit her in the mouth,⁷⁸ blood flowed down her breast, many men saw it.

75 This is a formulaic line, cf. stt. 64, 65, 101.

76 A stakkur is especially best clothes of red or blue silk.

77 Eiga also has the sense here of “is married to,” and the same is true of the following stanza.

78 This is Grimhild, who hits her daughter Guðrun in the mouth.

128. “Tig tú, Guðrun dóttir mín, mangt man smæin lissa, betri var sjálv at biðja enn góðan mann at missa.
- “Hold your tongue, Guðrun my daughter, there is much that the shy will miss, it would be better to ask on your own behalf⁷⁹ than to lose a good man.
129. Guðrun, gakk í kjallaran, blanda mjøð og vín,
og so mikið óminni
tað lat tú har útfí.
- Guðrun, go to the cellar,
and mix mead and wine,
and so much forgetfulness
you should pour into it.
130. Og so mikið óminni
tað lat tú har útfí,
ikki má Sjúrdur minnast til hálvar ástir sínar.”
- And so much forgetfulness,
you should pour into it, Sjúrdur must not remember even half of his love.” 131. Guðrun gekk í kjallaran, blandaði mjøð í ker,
bæði snart og skundiliga inn fyri Sjúrða ber.
- Guðrun went to the cellar, mixed mead in a cup,
both quickly and hurriedly she carried it in before Sjúrdur.
132. Og so mikið óminni læt hon har útfí,
gekk so fyri Sjúrd svein, bað hann drekka til sín.
- And so much forgetfulness
she poured into it, then went before Sjúrdur swain,⁸⁰ asked him to drink a toast to her.
133. Drekka fór so dýran dramm, drakk av horninum bjarta,
mildingur misti minni sítt,
og brúður úr buðlungu hjarta.
- They drank such a magnificent drink, drank from the bright horn,
the generous one lost his memory, and the bride disappeared⁸¹ from the king’s⁸² heart.
134. Drekka fór sum dýri drammur, drakk av horninum leingi,
mildingur misti minni sítt,
og bøta man honum eingin.
- The drink went down like a costly drink would,
he drank lengthily from the horn,
the generous one lost his memory,
and no one will heal him.

79 Grimhild is advising Guðrun to propose to Sjúrdur.

80 Sjúrdur svein is a formulaic way of saying Sjúrdur’s name.

81 We have added “the” and “disappeared” here. This line should be understood in the context of the one above, so it is implied that he has lost his bride (Brynhild) from his heart. We are following the punctuation of the edition in our translation, but it is worth noting that the manuscript has no punctuation, and so that added by editors is a form of interpretation.

82 Buðlungur is a heiti for king or prince in the ballads.

135. Tá ið hann hevði drukkið, greiddi aftur skál, mintist ei til frú Brynhild og ei á hennara mál.
136. Tá ið hann hevði drukkið, greiddi aftur kerid,
mintist ei til Brynhildu, og ei, hvar hann hevði verið.
137. Drakk hon drykk og drakk hon tvá til tann dreingins deyða, honum kom einki annað í hug enn Guðruna at eiga.
138. Drakk hon drykk og drakk hon tvá til tann dreingin svinna, hiðan út í skemmu gongur Guðruna at finna.
139. Sjúrdur gekk í skemmu upp, Guðrun vegin finnur, frætti tað Brynhild á Hildarheyg, nú rann henni ónt í sinni.
140. Brynhild gekk av Hildarheyg,
tað hitt væna vív,
kappin gisti Guðruna,
men Sjúrdur misti lív.
141. Brynhild fyri munn mæli, tár á kinn man fljóta: “Ikki skal Guðrun Júkadóttir tann avrekskappan njóta.”
- When he had drunk,
he handed back the cup, he no longer remembered lady Brynhild and nothing of matters related to her.⁸³
- When he had drunk,
he handed back the cup,⁸⁴
he did not remember Brynhild, nor where he had been.
- She drank a drink and she drank two to the death of the hero,⁸⁵ nothing else came to his mind but to marry Guðrun.
- She drank a drink and she drank two to the wise⁸⁶ hero, he went from there to the bedroom⁸⁷ to find Guðrun.
- Sjúrdur went up into the bedroom, finding the way to Guðrun,⁸⁸ when Brynhild in Hildarheygur heard about it,
she became full of spite.
- Brynhild went from Hildarheygur,
that beautiful woman,
the hero slept at Guðrun's, but Sjúrdur lost his life.
- Brynhild spoke,
tears streaming down her cheeks: “Guðrun Júkadóttir will not have that excellent hero.”

83 Mál could be things related to her, what she has said, or voice. So, the line could mean “nor her voice.”

84 Note that the Faroese uses two different words for cup in stt. 135 and 136.

85 This likely means because of this he is going to die in the sense of foreshadowing, rather than signalling her intention to kill him.

86 This is from svinnur, a poetic word used to describe someone as intelligent, clever, sensible, or wise, rather than from svinna, when someone is diminished, reduced, or has lost weight.

87 We have added “he” here to make it less ambiguous.

88 Grammatically this could also be she who finds her way to him.

142. Brynhild fyrri munnri mælir, sorgartíð skal eg kalla: “Hava það, ið onnur eigur, það skal lukkast valla.”
- Brynhild spoke,
a time of grief I shall call it:
“To have that which another has,
that shall hardly go well.”⁸⁹ 143. Møttust tær á miðjari leið, Brynhild og Guðrun Júka, onnur teirra gleðina bar,
og onnur harmin sjúka.
- They met halfway in the middle,
Brynhild and Júki’s Guðrun, one of them bore happiness, and the other desperate grief.
144. Það var Guðrun Júkadóttir, gjörði so mangt av fári, hon vildi ikki njóta það vatn, sum rann av Brynhildu hári.
- That was Guðrun Júkadóttir, did so much out of foolishness, she didn’t want to use the water that ran from Brynhild’s hair.⁹⁰
145. Guðrun leyp á áнна út, sum fossurinn rann so snarur, tí hon eigur Sjúrdða svein, sum hœvd yvir allar bar.
- Guðrun jumped out into the river,
as the cascade ran so fast, because she married Sjúrdður swain, who was a head above everyone.⁹¹
146. Guðrun leyp á áнна út, sum fossurinn rann so stríður, tí hon eigur Sjúrdða unga, sum ein yvir allar ríður.
- Guðrun jumped out into the river,
as the cascade was so rough,
because she married young Sjúrdður, who rides better than everyone else.
147. Mælti það Guðrun Júkadóttir fyrsta orðið tá:
“Hvør gav tær það fingurgull, eg síggi tínum fingri á?”
- Guðrun Júkadóttir then spoke the first word:
“Who gave you that finger-gold
I see on your finger?”
148. Svaraði Brynhild Buðladóttir, tekur um hjarta at mœða: “Vit munnu ognast eina reiggj, vit hava so mangt at rœða.
- Brynhild Buðladóttir answered, overcome by grief in the heart:
“We will experience strife,⁹² we have so much to discuss.

89 This echoes what Guðrun says in stt. 125 and 126.

90 This scene with the two women arguing at the river is known as the Quarrel of the Queens in Old Norse studies. See Bryan, “Indirect Aggression.”

91 The idea here is that Guðrun goes further out into the river than Brynhild due to her pride.

92 They will both experience grief because they both want the same man and cannot have him. This is not the strife happening to them together but rather between them.

149. Hetta sama fingurgull, tú sært á fingri mínum, gav mær Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, tú vilti við ástum tínum.”
- This same finger-gold you see on my finger, was given to me by Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, who you enchanted with your love.” 150. Brynhild tagdi, Guðrun sagdi, fast er snótin stríð: “Hví man mín bróðir Gunnar kongur ei ognast so vænt eitt vív?”
- Brynhild was silent, Guðrun spoke, the woman’s⁹³ stubbornness⁹⁴ was steadfast, “Why will my brother King Gunnar not marry such a beautiful woman?” 151. Til tess svaraði frú Brynhild, í tungu var hon snjöll: “Eg lovi ekki tógva kongar báðar í einari høll.”
- To this the lady Brynhild answered, she was eloquent:
“I won’t love two kings both in one hall.”⁹⁵ 152. “Sjúrdur hefur tín moydóm spilt og brotið Buðlins frama, ríkum kongi givið í völd, og nú havi eg tann sama.”
- “Sjúrdur has taken your virginity and lost Buðlin’s favour, you entrusted yourself to the powerful king,⁹⁶ and now I have the same one.” 153. “Tú tøvrt ekki, falssnóta, brigða mær tað svá,
fyri títt orð skal Sjúrdur doyggja, um eg liva má.”
- “You don’t need, liar,⁹⁷ to accuse me like that,
for your words Sjúrdur shall die, while I must live.” 154. “Ikki óttist eg hóttur tínar, tó tú ert í orðum stív, so er eingin í Júkagørðum, ið ríður um Sjúrðar lív.”
- “I am not frightened by your threats, though you are good with your words, there is no such person in Júki’s court, who has power over Sjúrdur’s life.” 155. Grátandi snúðist Brynhild í sín sal at sitja, Gunnar kongur fyrstur og fremstur hennara kom at vitja.
- Crying, Brynhild turned to sit in her hall,
King Gunnar came first and foremost to visit her.

93 Snót is a heiti for woman or girl.

94 Stríð also has the connotation that she is being bloody-minded.

95 The same hall (her hall).

96 This seems to be a Danish construction similar to give sig Gud i völd, “commend oneself to God.” Guðrun is saying Brynhild has yielded or entrusted herself to the powerful king and now Guðrun has the same king.

97 A falssnóta is a falsifier.

156. “Tú fært einki yndi av mær,
ein manst tú tað vænta, so leingi eg Sjúrdá við eygum síggi, seint man angur lætta.” “You will get no love from me,
you must not expect that,
as long as I see Sjúrdur,⁹⁸ regret⁹⁹ dissipates slowly.” 157. Brynhild gongur til seingina av teirri somu grund, og nú tolr hon fyri Sjúrdá so ónda eina stund. Brynhild went to bed for those same reasons, and now she suffers because of Sjúrdur so terrible a time.
158. Frætti tað Sjúrdur Sigmundarson á teirri somu stund, sjálvur fór hann at vitja tað unniliga sprund. Sjúrdur Sigmundarson heard about that right then,¹⁰⁰
he went to visit her himself
that beautiful woman.
159. “Tað hevur eingin hunskur riddari gjørt sum tú,
tú saknaði ikki fljóðið, tú fyrstur lovaði trú.” “No Hunnish knight has done as you,
you did not miss the woman¹⁰¹ that you first promised to be faithful to.” 160. “Hoyr tú, mín hin veldiga søta, kenn mær einki um,
vendur var mín hugurin frá hesum ástum tínum.” “Listen, my magnificent sweet one, do not blame me,¹⁰²
my thoughts were turned from your love.”
161. Tað fyrsta sum hon mundi Sjúrdá við eygum sjá, tá mundi hon Brynhild eina unga dóttur fá. Immediately when she saw Sjúrdur,¹⁰³
Brynhild
had a young daughter.
162. Til tess svaraði Brynhild fyrst á orði tá: “Berið mítt barn á áanna út, eg vil tað ikki sjá.” To this Brynhild replied the first thing she said: “Carry my child out into the river,
I don’t want to see it.”

98 Literally “as long as I see Sjúrdur with my eyes.” This is formulaic.

99 This could also mean “guilt” or “dread.”

100 Literally “at that same moment.”

101 Fljóð is a heiti for woman.

102 See Kamban, Kenn mær einki um.

103 Literally “saw Sjúrdur with her eyes.” This is formulaic, cf. st. 156.

163. Tóku tey Áslu Sjúrdardóttur, floyttu oman eftir á, stórar áir og stríðir streymar bóru hana londum frá.
- They took Ásla Sjúrdardóttir, floated her on the river, strong rivers and rapid currents carried her from the lands.
164. Brynhild gekk á Hildarheyg, nú ber hon kinn so reyðan, nú á teirri sorgartíð voldi hon Sjúrdar deyða.
- Brynhild went to Hildarheygur, now she had such red cheeks, now in those times of sorrow she brought about the death of Sjúrdur.
165. Mangur hefur hóttur notið fyri fagurt vív,
liðið er nú at evstu stund, Sjúrdur missir lív.
- Many have endured threats
for beautiful women, it has now passed¹⁰⁴ to the final moment, Sjúrdur loses his life.
166. Mangur hefur hóttur notið fyri tær fríðu moyar, nú er liðið at síðstu stund, Sjúrdur hann skal doyggja.
- Many have endured threats
for the lovely maidens, now it is the final moment,
Sjúrdur he shall die.
167. Sjúrdur var ein avrekskappi, vá sítt svørð í droyra, og honum völdu kvinnur deyð, sum tit skulu fáa at hoyra.
- Sjúrdur was an excellent hero, struck his sword in blood,¹⁰⁵ and women caused him to die, as you shall hear about.
168. Sjúrdur varð av lívi tikin frá tí gullinum reyða,
tað vóru moyar í forðum tíð,
sum völdu mannadeyða.
- Sjúrdur's life was taken from him from the red gold,
it was maidens in ancient times,
that caused the death of a man.
169. Tað vóru moyar í forðum tíð, gjørdu so mangt tað bragdið, Brynhild unga Buðlins dóttir kemur nú fyrst í kvæðið.
- It was maidens in ancient times,
who did so many deeds,
young Brynhild Buðlin's daughter is now mentioned first in the ballad.
170. Brynhild unga Buðlins dóttir, føgur yvir brún,
gullband henni um herðar liggur við flættað hári snúnum.
- Young Brynhild Buðlin's daughter, fair across the brow,¹⁰⁶
a band of gold lies around her shoulders with hair braided in a twist.

104 Time has elapsed.

105 Droyri is a poetic word for blood. When he swings his sword, he causes blood to be spilt.

106 She is beautiful.

171. Brynhild gekk í hallina inn av so miklum móði, ikki mundi mæla tað
hitt unniliga fljóð.
- Brynhild walked into the hall in great anger,
she didn't speak a word
the beautiful woman.
172. Sjúrdur rendi sínum fóti undir frúnnar stól, ikki vildi sitja tað
hitt unniliga fljóð.
- Sjúrdur banged his foot on the lady's chair,¹⁰⁷ it didn't sit well with her
the beautiful woman.
173. Høgnar kemur av skógnum heim við hvössum slíðraspjóti:
"Hann skal harðan deyðan tola, ið tær hefur gjørt ímóti."
- Høgnar comes home from the forest with a sharp sword:¹⁰⁸
"He shall endure a cruel death, he who has offended you." 174. "Tað er hon Guðrun systir tín, hon völdi mær tað stríð, eg man ongan søtan sova, meðan Sjúrdur er á lívi."
- "It is your sister Guðrun, she caused me this harm,
I will not sleep sweetly, while Sjúrdur still lives."
175. Høgnar so til orða tekur:
"Nú man tað so vera,
Sjúrdur er mín heitbróðir, eg kann honum einki gera."
- Then Høgnar speaks:
"So it's like this,
Sjúrdur is my sworn brother,
I can't do anything to him."
176. "Tú fært einki yndi av mær,
ei tørvt tú tað vænta, so leingi eg Sjúrða við eygum síggi seint man angur lætta."
- "You will get no love from me, you needn't expect it, as long as I can see Sjúrdur regret dissipates slowly."¹⁰⁹ 177. "Tað er einki eykarverk at ganga Sjúrða ímóti, hvar ið hann kemur í váknaskjal, har hefur hann høvur á spjóti."
- "It is no easy feat¹¹⁰ to go against Sjúrdur, wherever he comes into combat, he has a head on his spear"

107 Sjúrdur kicked her chair, and it is a matter of interpretation whether this was accidental or deliberate.

108 Slíðraspjót is a poetic word for sword used in the ballads.

109 This echoes her words in st. 156.

110 We interpret this as Old Norse akrverk, "field-work, harvest-work." A close English expression would be "it is no walk in the park." Lyngbye glosses this as "et Arbeide, som man maa egges, opmuntres til" (work that one must be egged on or encouraged to do). Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, p. 196, st. 169n.

178. “Tú fært einki yndi av mær,
ei tann menjartrá, fyr enn tú hefur Sjúrd svein tykkara londum frá.”
- “You will get no love from me,¹¹¹
nor that mighty passion, before you have Sjúrdur swain off your lands.”
179. Tað var Høgnar Júkason, hann stilti stál fyri stokk, yppist ráð av illari dáð,
so køld eru kvinnu tokk(!).
- That was Høgnar Júkason he put sword before the beam,¹¹² the consequences of evil scheming have been exposed,¹¹³
so cold is the love of a woman.
180. Brynhild setist í gullstólin,
frá man frættast víða,
nú skulu teir Húnakongar burtur á skógvin ríða.
- Brynhild sat herself in the golden throne, it was told far and wide,¹¹⁴ now the Hunnish kings shall ride away to the forest.
181. Brynhild situr á Hildarstóli, spælir við gyltum knívi: “Ikki aftur í mína høll, fyr enn Sjúrdur er av lívi!”
- Brynhild sits on Hildarstólur, playing with a golden¹¹⁵ knife:¹¹⁶
“Do not return to my hall, before Sjúrdur has been killed.” 182. “Hoyr tú, Brynhild Buðlins dóttir, hví eykar tú os tann vanda, hann er eingin í Húnalandi, Sjúrða kann bestanda.
- “Listen, Brynhild daughter of Buðlin, why do you put us mortal danger,
there is no one in Húnaland, that can withstand Sjúrdur.¹¹⁷ 183. Hoyr tú, Brynhild Buðlins dóttir, tær tað sigast má,
hann er eingin í Húnalandi,
ið høggun hans høvur frá.”
- Listen, Brynhild daughter of Buðlin,
it has to be said to you,
there is no one in Húnaland,
that can chop his head off.”

111 Cf. stt. 156 and 176.

112 Stokkur means “beam,” but Lyngbye interprets this word as the Icelandic stakka, meaning “hide,” and interprets this line as “at sætte Sværdet for Brystet” (he put the sword to the breast). Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, p. 199, st. 171n.

113 This is the line as translated by Føroysk-ensk orðabók, s.v. “Yppa.” The line is translated “a plan arises from the dreadful deed” in Føroysk-ensk orðabók / Faroese-English Dictionary, s.v. “Yppa.”

114 This is a formulaic phrase. Cf. Regin smiður, stt. 73 and 116.

115 Or “gilded.”

116 This could be a sword, since knívur can be used as a poetic word for sword in ballads.

117 This means to survive a fight with Sjúrdur.

184. Brynhild situr í sínum stóli, leikar við gyltum knívi: “Tit fáa einki yndi av mær, fyr enn Sjúrdur er frá lívi.”
- Brynhild sits in her chair, playing with a golden knife:
“You will get no love from me,¹¹⁸ before Sjúrdur has lost his life.” 185. “Hoyr tú, Brynhild Buðlins dóttir, legg sjálf til tess ráð,
hvussu vit skulu tann mikla mann burtur av lívi fáa!”
- “Listen, Brynhild daughter of Buðlin, give us advice,¹¹⁹
how shall we
take the life of that mighty man!” 186. Brynhild fyrri munni mælir, sorg um hjarta man røkka: “Gevið Sjúrða salta krás og hartil einki drekka!”
- Brynhild says,
sorrow will reach her heart: “Give Sjúrdur salty food,¹²⁰
and nothing to drink with it!
187. Tað munnu vera ráðini góð, eg gevi foruttan ekka:
latið hann eta salta krás og hartil lítið drekka!”
- This is a good plan,
I give without fear:
let him eat salty food
and not much to drink with it!” 188. Sjúrdur gongur í hallina inn, vænur er hann og vitur, sum hon Brynhild Buðlins dóttir fyrri í stóli situr.
- Sjúrdur walks into the hall,
he is handsome and wise, as Brynhild daughter of Buðlin she sits in her throne.
189. Sjúrdur stendur á hallargólvi við gullslagið skjold í hendi, Brynhild unga Buðlins dóttir eyguni frá honum vendi.
- Sjúrdur stands on the floor in the hall with a gilded shield in his hand, young Brynhild daughter of Buðlin turns her gaze from him.
190. “Gud náði meg í verðini, hvat ið meg skuldi henda:
eg skuldi allar mínar ástir, Sjúrdur, frá tær venda.”
- “God have mercy on me in this world, that it might happen to me:
that I would all my love, Sjúrdur, turn from you.”
191. Sjúrdur so til orða tekur: “Nú er av tað versta, tá ið eg aftur av skógnum komi, tá skal eg teg festa.”
- Then Sjúrdur begins to speak:
“Now the situation is extremely bad, when I return from the forest
I will be betrothed to you.”

118 Cf. stt. 156 and 176.

119 They need her to help plan what to do to kill Sjúrdur.

120 Krás has the connotation that the food is delicious and also likely meat.

192. Svaraði Brynhild Buðlins dóttir, ber um hjarta ve:
“Hoyr tú, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, tú festir ikki meg.”
- Brynhild daughter of Buðlin answered, carrying sorrow¹²¹ in her heart: “Listen, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, you won’t be betrothed to me.” 193. Tá var rómur í Buðlins hœll, sveinar ríða út,
Brynhild sat eftir í Hildarstóli, feldi tár á dúk.
- It was noisy in Buðlin’s hall,
the men rode out,
Brynhild was left behind in Hildarstólur, shed tears on cloth.
194. Tá var rómur í Buðlins hœll, sveinar drukku vín, Brynhild eftir í Hildarstóli, hon feldi tár á lín.
- It was noisy in Buðlin’s hall,
the men were drinking wine, Brynhild left behind in Hildarstólur, she shed tears on linen.
195. Buðlin kongur til orða tekur, fast av móðins ekka: “Fáið Sjúrða hjálmin tann, ið hann skal undan drekka!”
- King Buðlin begins to speak, though from sorrow’s fear: “Give Sjúrdur that helmet, that he shall drink from!”
196. Brynhild fyri munni mæli, sorg um hjarta man byggja: “Hoyr tú tað, mín sæli faðir, hann skal eftir liggja.”
- Brynhild says,
sorrow in her heart: “Listen, my dear father, it shall be left behind.” 197. Tí svaraði Buðlin kongur, hann heldur á ringi reyða: “Hoyr tú, Brynhild dóttir mín, hví elvir tú Sjúrða deyða?”
- King Buðlin answered, holding onto the red ring:
“Listen, Brynhild my daughter,
why are you causing Sjúrdur’s death?” 198. “Eingin unnar so øðrum væl, at sínum av man hyggja, ikki skal Sjúrdur Sigmundarson longur í heimum byggja.”
- “No one loves someone else so dearly, when they ignore them, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson shall not live in this world any longer.” 199. “Minnist tú, Brynhild dóttir mín, minnist tú ta tíð,
dróst tú Sjúrð av Norðlondum ígjøgnum grøna líð?
- “Do you remember, Brynhild my daughter,
do you remember that time, when you drew Sjúrdur from the northern lands
through the green slopes?

121 Old Norse vé and Danish ve means “woe, misery.”

200. Minnst tú, Brynhild dóttir mín, tá ið tú blandaði vín, dróst tú Sjúrdá av Norðlondum á Hildarheyg til tín?" Do you remember, Brynhild my daughter, when you mixed wine,
you drew Sjúrdur from the northern lands to you on Hildarheygur?"¹²² 201. Buðlin kongur av sali gongur eina morguntíð snimma, eftir Brynhild dóttir hans við hond upp undir kinn. King Buðlin walks from the hall early one morning,
Brynhild his daughter is left behind with her head in her hands.
202. Árla var um morgunin, sólin roðar í lund,
reystar kempur váknin taka, fárlig vóru sprund. Early in the morning, the sun rises in the grove, bold warriors take their weapons, women were dangerous.
203. Út ríða teir Júkungar, Sjúrdur var í ferð,
visti ei av hilmarasvikum, teir bundu ráðagerð. The Júkungar rode out, Sjúrdur on the trip,
he knew nothing of the princes'¹²³ treachery they were plotting.
204. Brynhild gekk á Hildarsal, sá hon út so víða, Sjúrdur frægi fyrst og fremst fyri Húnakongum ríður. Brynhild went to Hildarsalur, she looked out far and wide, brave Sjúrdur first and foremost rides before the Hunnish kings.
205. Ríða út úr Buðlins borg, sum teir gjørdu ofta, eftir liggur Sjúrdar svørð heimi á Brynhildu lofti. They ride out from Buðlin's castle, as they often did,
Sjúrdur's sword is left behind
at home in Brynhild's loft 206. Brynhild settist í gyltan stól av so miklari pínu, møðiliga feldi hon tárini á báðar armar sínar. Brynhild seats herself in the golden throne in such great torment, sorrowfully she shed tears down both her arms.¹²⁴
207. Brynhild grætur møðiliga,
tað hitt væna vív:
"Vildi eg Sjúrdá við eygum sætt í Hildarsali til mín." Brynhild cries sorrowfully,
that beautiful woman:
"I wish I could see Sjúrdur in Hildarsalur with me."

122 In st. 27, King Buðli asks for Brynhild's plan to get Sjúrdur to her. Then, in stt. 48 and 49, it is told that she drew him to her. There is, however, no mention earlier in the ballad of her having mixed wine in connection with this; this is something that Guðrun does.

123 Hilmir is a heiti for prince.

124 Women shedding tears down their arms is formulaic in the ballads.

208. Brynhild grætur so mǫðiliga,
tað hitt væna vív:
“Vildi eg Sjúrða við eygum sætt í Hildarstóli mínum.”
- Brynhild cries so sorrowfully,
that beautiful woman:
“I wish I could see Sjúrður in my Hildarstólur.” 209. Brynhild grætur mǫðiliga,
tað hitt væna vív:
“Far væl, Sjúrður Sigmundarson, eg síggi teg ei í lívi.”
- Brynhild cries sorrowfully,
that beautiful woman:
“Farewell, Sjúrður Sigmundarson,
I won’t see you alive again.”
210. Ríða teir á skógvin burtur, gláðir foruttan ekka,
teir Sjúrða salta krás
og hartil einki drekka.
- They ride to the forest,
happy without fear,
they gave Sjúrður salty food and nothing to drink with it.¹²⁵ 211. Ríða teir á skógvin burtur, lótu sporar ringla,
Brynhild situr á Hildarstóli ferðig til at springa.
- They ride away to the forest,
their spurs jingle,
Brynhild sits on Hildarstólur
ready to burst.
212. Ríða teir á skógvin burtur,
alt foruttan ekka,
svørji tann eið á mína trú,
at nú lysta teir at drekka.
- They ride to the forest,
with no fear,
I swear an oath by all that is sacred,
that they now desire to drink.
213. Drekka undan sínum hjálmi bæði títt og ofta, eftir liggur Sjúrðar hjálmur heimi á Brynhildu lofti.
- They drink from their helmets
very often,
Sjúrður’s helmet is left behind
at home in Brynhild’s loft.
214. Drekka undan sínum hjálmi,
alt foruttan ekka,
Sjúrður situr á Grana baki, nú lystir hann at drekka.
- They drink from their helmets,
totally without fear, Sjúrður sits on Grani’s back,
he now desires to drink.
215. Drekka undan sínum hjálmi, gláðir foruttan sút, Sjúrður loysti hjálmbondini, steig úr saðli út.
- They drink from their helmets,
happy without distress, Sjúrður loosened his helmet straps,¹²⁶ stepped out of his saddle.

125 This enacts Brynhild’s plan that she came up with in stt. 186 and 187.

126 One can wonder why Sjúrður still has helmet straps when it is emphasized and important for the plot that he does not have his helmet with him.

216. Sjúrdur sá ikki svikara vón, steig úr gullsaðli út,
skundaði sær at kelduni gláður foruttan sút. Sjúrdur didn't expect betrayal, dismounted from his golden saddle, he hurried to the spring,
happy without distress.
217. Sjúrdur legðist at drekka, sum vatn stóð fyri í brunni, sjáldan hevur góður kvistur sprottið av illum runni. Sjúrdur laid down to drink, as if the water was in a well, seldom has a good branch sprouted from a bad bush.¹²⁷ 218. Sjúrdur legðist at drekka, sum vatn stóð fyri í veit, Høgnar átti mækan tann,
á Sjúrdar hálsi beit. Sjúrdur laid down to drink, the water was before him in a channel, Høgnar owned the sword,¹²⁸ that cut Sjúrdur's throat 219. Sjúrdur legðist at drekka, góður drongur og nýtur, Høgnar átti mækan tann,
á Sjúrdar hálsi bitur. Sjúrdur laid down to drink, a good and brave young man, Høgnar owned the sword, that cuts Sjúrdur's throat.
220. Høgnar høg, og Gunnar hjó, við hvøssum slíðragnívi, teir gjørdu so mikið níðingsverk, teir tóku Sjúrdar av lívi. Høgnar slashed, and Gunnar hacked, with sharp swords,
they did such a great foul deed,
they took Sjúrdur's life.
221. Høgnar høg, og Gunnar hjó, og tað fór millum dreingir, hesi ganga tí illdømi í Húnalandi leingi. Høgnar slashed, and Gunnar hacked, and it went like that between the heroes, these evil incidents were told about in Húnaland for a long time.
222. Høgnar høg, og Gunnar hjó, mest av Brynhildu ráðum, hevði hann vitað av svikunum, maður var hann fyri báðum. Høgnar slashed, and Gunnar hacked, mostly because of Brynhild's advice, had he known about the treachery, he would have won over both of them.
223. Upp slapp hann undan øllum teim, tungu bar hann so snjalla:
"Hevði eg vitað av svikunum, mentur var eg fyri allar." He broke free from all of them, he was so eloquent:
"Had I known about this treachery,
I would have managed all of you."

127 The final two lines mean "like father, like son," or "a chip off the old block."

128 Mæki is a heiti for sword used in ballads.

224. Sjúrdur knýtir neva sín saman av góðum treysti, sipaði so til Gunnar kong, niður fell hann av hesti.
- Sjúrdur clenched his fist together powerfully, took a swing at King Gunnar, he fell down from the horse.¹²⁹
225. Sjúrdur so til orða tekur:
“Nú hava tit meg svikið.
Hevði eg havt mítt svørð í hond, tað skuldi betri tikið.
- Sjúrdur began to speak:
“Now you have betrayed me.
Had I had my sword in my hand, this would have gone better.
226. Hoyr tú, Høgnar Júkason, nú hevur tú vigið meg,
tá var eg á Finnmarkini, ið eg roynði teg.”
- Listen, Høgnar Júkason,
now you have killed me, when I was in Finnmark,
I tested you.”¹³⁰
227. Sjúrdur følnaði á grønum vølli, nú var hann følin og nipin, men hevði hann havt sítt svørð í hond,
tað hevði betri tikið.
- Sjúrdur grew pale on the green field, now he was pallid and crestfallen, but had he had his sword in his hand, that would have gone better.
228. Sjúrdur legðist at drekka, so ganga søgur frá,
har kom Høgnar Júkason, kleyv hann í lutir tvá.
- Sjúrdur lay himself down to drink,
so the story goes,
here came Høgnar Júkason, and split him in two pieces.
229. Eitt kom boð í hallina inn,
Brynhildu sigur frá: “Deyður er Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, Gunnar kongur vá.”
- A messenger came into the hall,
and told Brynhild: “Sjúrdur Sigmundarson is dead, King Gunnar killed him.”
230. Eitt kom boð í hallina inn:
“Sjúrdur hann er vigin.” Brynhild fór í svímilsi av Hildarstóli niður.
- A messenger came into the hall:
“Sjúrdur has been killed.”
Brynhild fainted down from Hildarstólur.
231. Eitt kom boð í hallina inn uttan av grønum vøll, Brynhild fagra í svímilsi av Hildarstóli fell.
- A messenger came into the hall,
out from the green field, beautiful Brynhild fainted, fell from Hildarstólur.

129 This is not a very heroic portrayal of Gunnar, who is hacking at an unarmed Sjúrdur lying down drinking from a channel, while Gunnar is presumably leaning off his horse to hack at him.

130 We have not heard about Sjúrdur fighting with Høgnar in Finnmark.

232. Gunnar kongur fyrstur og fremstur King Gunnar first and foremost hana mundi vitja, visited her,¹³¹ grátandi fór Brynhild unga young Brynhild went crying í sína song at sitja. to sit in her bed.
233. Gunnar kongur í salin gongur, King Gunnar went into the chamber, ber á brynju blá, wearing a black¹³² mailcoat, Brynhild unga Buðlins dóttir young Brynhild Buðlin's daughter, sjúk av sorgum lá. lay sick with sorrow.
234. Brynhild hon í seingini liggur, Brynhild she lay in the bed, Gunnar situr á stokki, Gunnar sits at the bedside, so er skrivað í breiðu bók, so it is written in a large book,¹³³ at kaldur er kvinnu tokki. that a woman's love is cold.
235. Gunnar kongur til orða tekur, King Gunnar began to speak, heldur at tí gleim: rather cheerfully: “Nú skal taka buðlungs lík, “Now shall the prince's corpse, føra til hallar heim.” be taken home to its hall.” 236. Skiftu sínum hestunum They changed their horses við so mangan lit, of so many a colour,¹³⁴ ikki vildi Grani ganga, Grani did not want to walk,¹³⁵
tí hann hevði manns vit. because he had the mind of a person.
237. Teir royndu sínar hestarnar, They tried out their horses, hvør við sínum lit, each its own colour,
ikki vildi Grani ganga, Grani did not want to walk,
tí hann hevði manns vit. because he had the mind of a person.
238. Teir skiftu sínum búnaði, They changed their attire, øllum sínum lit, each their own colour,
ikki vildi Grani ganga, Grani did not want to walk, tí hann hevði manns vit. because he had the mind of a person.

131 This mirrors how Hjalprek visited Hjördis after the death of her husband Sigmundur in Regin smiður.

132 In the Faroese it says blue, but bluing armour means to blacken it as an aesthetic choice.

133 This is often interpreted as a reference to an Icelandic saga manuscript.

134 They are changing their tired horses for fresh horses and the horses are of many different colours.

135 This means Grani is not budging, because, as we will see in st. 239, Gunnar is trying to ride him and Grani will only accept Sjúrdur.

239. Ikki vildi Grani ganga, tí Gunnar honum reið, fyr enn hin deyði Sjúrdur honum á herðar neig.
Grani did not want to walk,
because Gunnar rode him, until the dead Sjúrdur was sitting on his withers.¹³⁶ 240. Deyðan tóku teir Sjúrða unga, teir lívdu ei nakað eftir, høvuðleysan kappan tann í gullsaðilin settu.
They took the young dead Sjúrdur,
they didn't spare their efforts, they sat the decapitated hero in the gold saddle.
241. Ikki vildi Grani ganga, Gunnar kongur ríður, fyr enn frægi Sjúrdur
í gullbygilin stígur.
Grani did not want to walk,
King Gunnar was riding, before the valiant Sjúrdur steps into the gold stirrups 242. Deyðan tóku teir Sjúrða unga, kappan tann hin snjalla, tá á teirri somu tíð
førdu heim til hallar.
They took the young dead Sjúrdur,
the eloquent hero,
then at the same time
they took him home to the hall.
243. Deyðan tóku teir Sjúrða svein, bóru inn á skildri,
hefur so mangur latið lív, helst av kvinnu veldi.
They took the dead Sjúrdur swain, carried him in on a shield, so many have lost their lives, especially because of women.
244. Deyðan tóku teir Sjúrd svein, løgdu Brynhildu hjá: “Berið Guðrunu Sjúrða, hon eigur hann enn sum áður.”
They took the dead Sjúrdur swain, laid him next to Brynhild: “Carry Sjúrdur to Guðrun, she is married to him now as before.”
245. Deyðan tóku teir Sjúrða unga, løgdu hjá Guðrunar síðu, Brynhild unga sá hará,
nú gongur hon kyk av kvíðu.
They took the dead young Sjúrdur, laid him by Guðrun's side, young Brynhild was watching, now she walks shaking with agony.
246. Brynhild hevði manga nátt sovið á Sjúrdar armi, nú hon hevði hans deyða volt, springur hon kyk av harmi.
Brynhild had for many nights slept in Sjúrdur's arms, now she had brought about his death, she dies shaking of grief.
247. Brynhild unti Sjúrða væl, meg man minna enn,
kvinnur hava av lívi fingið
mangar sterkar menn.
Brynhild loved Sjúrdur very much,
if I still remember,
women have taken the lives of many strong men.

136 The withers of a horse are the front part of its back.

248. Brynhild unti Sjúrða væl, við allskyns spekt og meingi,
kvinnur hava av lívi fingið mangar reystar dreingir. Brynhild loved Sjúrður very much, with all kinds of gentleness and a lot,¹³⁷
women have taken the lives of many valiant heroes.
249. Hósins dóttir Kjartan unti við tann mentilin reyða, tá ið hon ikki kundi hann fáa, voldi hon hans deyða. Hósins¹³⁸ daughter loved Kjartan¹³⁹ with the red clothing,¹⁴⁰ when she could not have him, she brought about his death.
250. Hava tit hoyrt frá Ingigerð, meg man minna enn,
hon legði niður á grønan vøll tógva sterkar menn. Have you heard about Ingigerð,¹⁴¹
if I still remember,
she killed on the green field two strong men.
251. Hava tit hoyrt frá Dalitu, loynir ei mín tunga,
bráðliga hon av lívi fekk tann sterka Samson unga. Have you heard about Delilah, I don't try to hide it, suddenly she took the life of the young Samson the strong.¹⁴² 252. So gjørði Ásla Sjúrðardóttir við høvdingin reyða,
svørji tann eið á mína trú,
hon voldi kong Regnars deyða. So did Ásla Sjúrðardóttir¹⁴³ with the red chieftain,¹⁴⁴
I swear an oath by all that is sacred,
she caused King Ragnar's death.

137 As in, she loved him a lot.

138 His name is Ósvífr in Icelandic, which is similar. See Einar Ól. Sveinsson, Laxdæla Saga, 311.

139 This is the story of Guðrún and Kjartan in the Icelandic Laxdæla saga and the Faroese Kjartans tættir (CCF 23). Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, pp. 477–97. See also Kamban, Kenn mær einki um, 64–65.

140 Kjartan is given scarlet clothing by the king. See Einar Ól. Sveinsson, Laxdæla saga, chap. 40, p. 124. Mentilin is mentarlín, which is decorated linen. See Hammershaimb and Jakobsen, Færøsk anthologi, vol. 2, p. 203, s.v. mentarlín.

141 The stanza about Ingigerður is from Torsteinskvæði (CCF 99). See Kamban, Kenn mær einki um, 65.

142 In the Bible story in Judges 13–16, Delilah betrays Samson by cutting off his hair, which causes him to lose his strength. This ultimately leads to his death. See Samsons kvæði (CCF 113); Kamban, Kenn mær einki um, 65.

143 Her name is Áslaug in Old Norse, and she is the central character in the Icelandic Ragnars saga loðbrókar.

144 These two lines mean that Ásla also betrayed King Ragnar (Ragnarr loðbrókar in the Icelandic sagas).

253. Regnar kongur í Eysturlondum menschur var hann av dreingjum, Ásla völdi deyða hans, hon duldi sítt navn so leingi. Regnar king of the eastern lands he was brave amongst heroes, Ásla caused his death,
she concealed her name for so long.¹⁴⁵ 254. So gjørði Guðrun Júkadóttir, vil eg for yður tína,
hon læt burtur av lívi taka fýra brøður sínar. So did Guðrun Júkadóttir, I'll tell you about it,
she had the lives taken of four of her brothers.¹⁴⁶ 255. So gjørdu moyar í forðum tíð innan rósinslund,
tá ið tær ikki sín vilja fingur, voldu tær deyðastund. So did maidens in ancient times in the grove of roses,
when they did not get their way,
they caused the hour of death.
256. So gjørdu moyar í forðum tíð, sum frægir siga frá,
tá ið tær ikki sín vilja fingur, løgdu tær deyðaráð. So did maidens in ancient times, as is famously¹⁴⁷ told,
when they did not get their way,
they laid out deadly plans.
257. Deyðan tóku teir Sjúrdá unga, løgdu Guðrunu á skeyt,
ikki visti brúður, hon vaknaði, fýrr enn blóð um bæði fleyt. They took the dead young Sjúrdur, laid him in Guðrun's lap,
the woman¹⁴⁸ didn't realize, she woke up, before blood drenched them both.¹⁴⁹ 258. Deyðan tóku teir Sjúrd svein, løgdu Guðrunu hjá,
ikki visti brúður, hon vaknaði, fýrr enn blóð á lendar lá. They took the dead Sjúrdur, and laid him beside Guðrun, the woman didn't realize, she woke up, before blood covered her loins.¹⁵⁰ 259. Ikki visti brúður, hon vaknaði, fýrr enn hon í benið brá,
tað var ei so undarligt, við sorg hon í tað sá. The woman didn't realize, she woke up, before she noticed the wound, it wasn't so strange,
that she saw it with distress.

145 Stt. 252–253 refer to Ragnars kvæði (CCF 2). For an analysis, see Kamban, Kenn mærl einki um, 65–66.

146 These are Gunnar and Høgnar who appear in this ballad, and the other two are Gíslar and Jarnar who are mentioned in Høgnar táttur, st. 17. Their mother Grímhild wants them to stay at home.

147 Frægir here is an adjective and means “famous” or “renowned.”

148 Brúður is a heiti for woman used in ballads; it also means bride.

149 The blood is flowing around them both.

150 Loins are specified here because they have laid the dead Sjúrdur in her lap.

260. Vaknaði Guðrun Júkadóttir, læt so orðum fara: “Síðst mundi eg, Gunnar kongur. svikum av tær vara.”
- Guðrun Júkadóttir woke up, spoke these words:
“You were the last one, King Gunnar, of whom I expected treachery.” 261. Guðrun setist upp undir seg, strýkur sveita frá,
blóðigan kysti hon munnin tann,
á Sjúrdar hævdi lá.
- Guðrun sat up in bed, wiped the blood off,
she kissed that bloody mouth,
on Sjúrdur’s face.
262. Blóðigan kysti hon munnin tann,
á Sjúrdar hævdi lá: “Hetta skal eg, Gunnar, hevna,
um eg liva má.”
- She kissed that bloody mouth,
on Sjúrdur’s face:
“This, Gunnar, I will avenge, if I’m able to live on.”
263. Guðrun steig úr seingini upp, blóð av henni rann,
svørji tann eið av míni trú, hon gekk í loftið fram.
- Guðrun got out of bed,
the blood ran off her,
I swear an oath by all that is sacred,
she went to the loft.
264. Guðrun steig úr seingini upp, rendi úr henni blóð,
so gekk hon í loftið fram, hon var um hjarta móð.
- Guðrun got out of bed,
the blood ran from her,
she went to the loft,
her heart was full of distress 265. Guðrun gekk í loftið fram, hon fór úr stakki reyða, alla sína ævina
syrgdi hon Sjúrdar deyða.
- Guðrun went to the loft, she took off the red gown,¹⁵¹
all her life
she mourned Sjúrdur’s death.
266. Brynhild sprakk av harmi, Sjúrdur læt sítt lív, tað man merkja meiningin,
at Brynhild hon var fríð.
- Brynhild died of sorrow,
Sjúrdur lost his life,
it must be noted that the opinion was,¹⁵² that Brynhild was beautiful.
267. Brynhild sprakk av harmi eftir Sjúrdar deyða, góvu Guðrunu gull og fæ og mangar ringar reyðar.
- Brynhild died of sorrow
after Sjúrdur’s death, they gave Guðrun gold and property and many red¹⁵³ rings.

151 It is likely here that the blood has made her gown red. Alternatively, her gown was red to start with.

152 This refers to the general opinion in the story world.

153 This just signifies gold rings.

268. “Hoyr tað, Guðrun systir mín, syrg ekki Sjúrdar deyða,
Artala kongur í Húnalandi kortar ei gullinum reyða.”
- “Listen, Guðrun my sister,
do not grieve Sjurður’s death,
King Artala in Húnaland is not lacking in red gold.” 269. “Syrg ekki, syrg ekki, dóttir mín,
syrg ekki Sjúrdar deyða,
Artala kongur í Húnalandi
kortar ei gullið reyða.”
- “Don’t grieve, don’t grieve, my daughter, don’t grieve the death of Sjurður,
King Artala in Húnaland, is not lacking in red gold.”¹⁵⁴
270. Svaraði Guðrun Júkadóttir av so tungum stríði: “Tó skal eg hevna Sjúrdar deyða, um eg verði á lívi.”
- Guðrun Júkadóttir answered from such great animosity: “I’ll still avenge Sjurður’s death, if I remain alive.”
271. Nú skal lata ljóði av, eg kvøði ikki longur á sinni,
nú skal taka upp triðja tátt
og víðari leggja í minni.
- Now I shall end my song,
I sing no longer at present,
now to begin the third part of the ballad and continue to remember it.¹⁵⁵
- Refrain* Grani bar gullið av heiði,
brá hann sínum brandi av reiði,
Sjúrdur vann av orminum,
Grani bar gullið av heiði.
- Grani carried the gold from the heath,
he brandished his blade in a fury,
Sjurður defeated the dragon,
Grani carried the gold from the heath.*

154 It must be Guðrun’s mother speaking here.

155 This implies continuing to transmit the ballad and to keep it in living memory.

THE BALLAD OF HØGNI (HØGNA TÁTTUR)

1. Artala kongur í Húnalandi, bróti úr bragdartátti,
festi Guðruna Júkadóttur, ið Sjúrdur snari átti.

King Artala in Húnaland, taken from a heroic ballad,¹ married Guðrun Júkadóttir, who was married to the swift Sjúrdur.

Refrain Grani bar gullið av heiði,
brá hann sínum brandi av reiði,
Sjúrdur vann av orminum,
Grani bar gullið av heiði.

*Grani carried the gold from the heath,
he brandished his blade in a fury,
Sjúrdur defeated the dragon,
Grani carried the gold from the heath.*

2. Artala kongur í hallina gongur, vekur upp dreingir snarar: “Nú skal eg festa Guðruna, vit ríða í Júkagarðar.”

King Artala walks into the hall, wakes up the brave men: “Now I shall marry Guðrun, we ride to the court of Júki.”

3. Artala kongur í Húnalandi
ríður fram yvir skóg,
úti Guðrun Júkadóttir
fyri honum stóð.

King Artala in Húnaland
rides through the forest, Guðrun Júkadóttir stood outside before him.

4. “Statt væl, Guðrun Júkadóttir, tú unniliga sprund,
nú skínur sól á heiðin lond ígjøgnum grønan lund.”

“Well met,² Guðrun Júkadóttir, you beautiful woman,
now the sun is shining on heathen lands
through the green grove.”

5. Artala kongur í Húnalandi, sigist í bragdartátti,
festi frúgv og førði heim, sum Sjúrdur í forðum átti.

King Artala in Húnaland,
it is told in a heroic ballad, married the lady and brought her home, the one that Sjúrdur was married to before.

6. Guðrun gekk at borði fram, siga má eg pá stand,
hana førði kongurin
við sær til Húnaland.

Guðrun went to the table,
I must say at once,³ the king took her with him to Húnaland.

7. Guðrun var leingi á Húnalandi, kinn bar hon so reyða, nú legði hon ráðini á at hevna Sjúrdar deyða.

Guðrun was in Húnaland for a long time,
her cheeks were so red, now she’s plotting to avenge Sjúrdur’s death.

² This greeting is a chivalric tribute to her and a mark of respect.

³ It is the singer of the ballad making this comment.

| 8. Artala kongur í Húnalandi blandar mjöð og vín, býður so øllum Júkungum
at drekka heim til sín. | King Artala in Húnaland mixes mead and wine, then invites all of Júki's people to drink at his home. |
| 9. Guðrun býður sínum brøðrum, letur ikki gloyma:
sterkar hurðar fyri hallina,
og fast við jarni soyma. | Guðrun invites her brothers, won't let them forget:
strong doors before the hall,
and nailed down firmly with iron. ⁴ |
| 10. Guðrun býður sínum brøðrum, letur ikki seinka,
sterkar hurðar fyri hallisdyr,
og fast við jarni leinkja. | Guðrun invites her brothers, won't let it be delayed, strong doors before the hall's doorway, and chained firmly with iron. ⁵ |
| 11. Guðrun gongur út og inn, letur blanda vín,
Høgnar, Gunnar og allar brøður letur hon heinta til sín. | Guðrun goes out and in,
has wine mixed,
Høgnar, Gunnar, and all the brothers
she has brought to her. | | 12. Høgnar gekk í hallina inn, heldur á búnum brandi:
"Nú lystir meg á Húnaland
at drekka tann mjöðin blandi." | Høgnar walks into the hall, grasping a readied sword:
"Now I desire to go to Húnaland to drink that mixed mead." |
| 13. Grimhild so til orða tekur, tykir í tí tortur:
"Um tú fert á Húnaland,
ikki kemur tú aftur." | Grimhild begins to speak, thinking there might be humiliation in it: ⁶
"If you go to Húnaland,
you shan't return." |
| 14. Høgnar stendur fyri breiðum borði, tungan mælir snimma:
"Tó skal eg á Húnaland
sigur av kappum vinna." | Høgnar stands before a wide table,
he responds immediately:
"Nevertheless in Húnaland I shall win a victory against the champions." |

4 The doors are very sturdy.

5 This implies it would be hard to escape.

6 This refers to Grimhild's motivation. This could also mean "pain" as well as humiliation. She might be thinking of the tragedy that will occur, and that she is expecting foul play. On the other hand, Grimhild might be trying to embarrass Høgnar by suggesting he won't win and therefore will not come back. So, you can interpret this line both ways: it could be a warning or she could be trying to embarrass him.

15. Grimhild so til orða tekur, tykir í tí mein: “Um tit fara á Húnaland, eingin kemur heim.” 16. Høgnar stendur á hallargólvi, hann klæddist í brynju blá: “Tó skal eg á Húnaland, tað standist av, hvat ið má.” 17. “Meðan tú fert á Húnaland, lat nú tað so gera:
Gíslar og hann Jarnar
skulu heima vera.
18. Meðan tú fert á Húnaland at drekka mjøð og vín, Gíslar og Jarnar verða eftir báðir hjá móður sín.”
19. Gíslar og hann Jarnar, Júkungarnir báðir, fara sær á Húnaland
mót síni móðurs ráðum.
20. Gíslar og hann Jarnar, Júkungarnir tveir,
fóru sær á Húnaland,
fátt kann forða feigum.
21. Tað var Høgnar Júkason, ríður út við strand,
møtti honum ein sævarkvinna
á tann hvíta sand.
22. “Hoyr tú inda, sævarkvinna, sig mær dømin mein,
um eg fari á Húnaland, komi eg heilur heim?”
- Grimhild begins to speak, thinking there might be harm in it: “If all of you⁷ go to Húnaland, no one shall come home.”
- Høgnar stands on the floor of the hall, he is dressing in blue⁸ armour: “Nevertheless I shall go to Húnaland, whatever the consequences might be.”
- “While you go to Húnaland, let us do this:
Gíslar and Jarnar
shall stay at home.
- While you go to Húnaland
to drink mead and wine, Gíslar and Jarnar shall stay behind both with their mother.”
- Gíslar and Jarnar,
both the sons of Júki,
are going to Húnaland against their mother’s advice.
- Gíslar and Jarnar,
the two sons of Júki,
went to Húnaland,
little⁹ can save the doomed.¹⁰
- It was Høgnar Júkason,
he rides to the beach,
a mermaid met him there on the white sand.
- “Listen lovely¹¹ mermaid, tell me the sorrowful fate,
if I go to Húnaland,
will I come home safely?”

7 It literally says “if you go,” but we have chosen to add “all of you” to make it clear that “you” is in the plural.

8 This implies that the armour is black.

9 There is little one can do.

10 This is an idiom that is still used in Faroese and appears in several ballads. See Føroysk-føroysk orðabók, s.v. “Forða.”

11 This is a courtly address that can also be used with men.

23. “Hoyr tú, Høgnar Júkason, eg sigi tær dømin mein,
um tú fert á Húnaland,
ikki kemur tú heim.”
- “Listen, Høgnar Júkason,
I will tell you the sorrowful fate,
if you go to Húnaland,
you shan’t return.”
24. Tað var Høgnar Júkason,
sínnum svørði brá,
hann kleyv hesa sævarkvinnu
sundur í lutir tvá.
- It was Høgnar Júkason,
he brandished his sword,
he chopped this mermaid
into two pieces.
25. Tekur hann hennara blóðiga høvur, kastar út á sund,
skjýtur hann kroppin eftir, sukku bæði til grund.
- He takes her bloody head, throws it into the sound, throws¹² the body after it, both sank to the bottom.
26. Tað var Høgnar Júkason, gongur fram við strand, møtti hann einum sævarmanni
á tann hvíta sand.
- It was Høgnar Júkason, walking along the beach, he met a merman
on the white sand.
27. “Hoyr tú inda, sævarmaður, sig mær í tí satt,
fari eg á Húnaland, komi eg heilur aftur?”
- “Listen lovely merman,
tell me truthfully,
if I go to Húnaland,
will I return safely?” 28. “Hoyr tá, Høgnar Júkason, tað man eg siga satt,
um tú fert á Húnaland,
um tað tú kemur aftur.”
- “Listen, Høgnar Júkason,
I will tell you truthfully,
if you go to Húnaland,
you will return.”¹³ 29. Hann læt knør av lunnni draga oman úr tøttum neysti, tá stóð fast í kjalborðum, fram leyp knørurin reysti.
- He has a ship¹⁴ dragged off the rollers¹⁵ down from the wind-tight boathouse,¹⁶ the keel strakes¹⁷ were stable, the upright¹⁸ ship leapt forward.

12 The two verbs for throw are different in the Faroese.

13 The um in the Faroese is likely only a filler, but it could indicate that the merman is non-committal in his answer.

14 A knørrur is a big sailing ship.

15 These are wooden rollers (lunnar) used when a boat is launched or brought up on shore.

16 This is a formulaic stanza. It means a well-built boathouse.

17 These are the boards that are closest to the keel.

18 The ship looks upright when you look at the stem (the most forward part of the bow, and an extension of the keel). In Faroese boatbuilding, it is important that the

30. Høgnar læt av lunnri ganga sína glæstriskeið,
skipini hildu í havið út, falkurin drívur av leið.
- Høgnar let off the rollers his magnificent ship,¹⁹
the ships sailed out into the ocean, the vessel²⁰ drifts off course.
31. Høgnar vindur segl í rá, letur so orðum svara,
grátandi vendi Grimhild drottning aftur í Júkagarðar.
- Høgnar sets sail,
and then he answers her, Queen Grimhild turned crying back to Júki's court.
32. So grætur Grimhild drottningin, tað hitt væna vív:
“Far væl, Høgnar sonur mín, eg síggi teg ei í lívi.”
- Queen Grimhild cries,²¹
the beautiful woman:
“Goodbye, Høgnar my son,
I won't see you alive again.”
33. Grimhild fyrri munni mælir, Høgnar reisir á ferð:
“Eg kenni væl Guðruna dóttur mína, er roynd í bágagerð.”
- Grimhild says,
as Høgnar goes on the journey:²² “I know my daughter Guðrun well, she is experienced in harmful acts.” 34. Høgnar talar til Gunnar kong, alt foruttan sút: “Vit vinda nú segl í húna hátt, vit seta í havið út.”
- Høgnar speaks to King Gunnar, without worries:
“Now we are hoisting the sail to the masthead, we are setting course for the sea.” 35. Ein kom maður í hallina inn til perlamentíð fríða: “Nú síggi eg falk í havi út alt undir tann grøna líða.”
- A man came into the hall to the beautiful parliament: “Now I see a vessel in the sea under the green hillside.” 36. “Sært tú skip eftir havi koma, seglini hvít sum lín,
vera man Høgnar Júkason at vitja systur sín.”
- “Do you see a ship coming across the sea,
the sails white as linen,
it must be Høgnar Júkason on his way to visit his sister.”

stem is upright rather than leaning forwards or backwards. If it leans forward, the boat does not look proud, whereas if it leans backwards, the construction of the boat looks too pompous. Upright therefore indicates a well-made boat.

19 A glæstriskeið is a word used in ballads meaning a magnificent or splendid ship.

20 A falkur literally means “falcon,” but in ballads is used poetically to mean a horse or a ship (here it clearly refers to a ship).

21 She is weeping, not crying out.

22 We have added “as” here to provide clarity.

37. Guðrun gekk í grasagarð, reyðargullið bar á hendi, ramar ristir hon rúnirnar, tær út í havið sendi.
- Guðrun walked in her garden, red gold on her arms,²³ she carved powerful runes, and sent them out to sea.
38. Ørnir tvær av landi komu, setast á salta sjógv,
vaksa tekur vindur í ský, aldan brýtur á lógv.
- Two eagles came from the land, sat themselves on the salty ocean, the wind picks up in the clouds, the wave breaks on the sandy beach.
39. Tá var veður á sjónum hart, ógvuligt á at líta,
stýrir so Høgnar Júkason,
at frá dró mjøllin hvíta.
- The weather on the sea was severe then,
terrible to behold,
Høgnar Júkason steers so that white snow came from the ship.²⁴ 40. So var veður á sjónum hart, tá ið Høgnar stóð til stýri, Gunnar kongur í lyfting gongur, nú bliknaði drongur dýri.
- The weather on the sea was so severe,
when Høgnar stood at the helm, King Gunnar walks on the poop deck, the magnificent hero now paled.²⁵ 41. So var veður á sjónum hart, tað brakar í borð og bondum, sundur gingu jarnárar báðar í Høgna hondum.
- The weather on the sea was so severe,
the strakes²⁶ and ribs are creaking, both iron oars broke apart in Høgnar's hands.
42. Tá var veður á sjónum hart, tað knakar í hvørjum stongum,
tað var Høgnar Júkason,
tók havn í Húnalandum.
- The weather on the sea was severe then,
every mast is groaning,
it was Høgnar Júkason,
who landed in Húnaland.
43. Løgdu undir Húnaland eina morguntíð,
alt var sum í bál at líta,
skeiðir dynja í.
- They lay by Húnaland
one morning,
everything was like looking into a bonfire,²⁷ the ships thunder in their speed.

23 These are golden rings on her arms.

24 This refers to foam from the waves.

25 This implies Gunnar is going pale from fear in the storm.

26 On a wooden vessel, the strakes are the longitudinal planks that make up the sides of the boat, running from front to rear.

27 The bonfire effect is probably a combination of the creaking noise made by the ships and the redness of the sunrise.

44. Løgdu undir Húnaland eina morgunstund,
alt var sum í bál at líta,
í tann skeiðadund.
- They lay by Húnaland
one morning,
everything was like looking into a bonfire, due to the noise of the ships.
45. Tá ið teirra snekkja hon kendi fagurt land,
fyrst steig Høgnar Júkason
sínnum fótum á land.
- When their ship²⁸
approached fair land, Høgnar Júkason was the first to step
foot on land.
46. Fyrst steig Høgnar Júkason
sínnum fótum á land, Gíslar og Jarnar og Gunnar kongur undir hans høggru hond.
- Høgnar Júkason was the first to step
foot on land,
Gíslar, Jarnar, and King Gunnar were at his right hand side.
47. Ganga teir frá strondum niðan, so er greitt fyri mær,
síðan allir Júkagarpar niðan í grasagarð.
- They walked up from the beach,
so I've been told,
then all the heroes of Júki went up to the garden.
48. Úti í miðjum grasgarði tungu bóru teir so snjalla, gingu so í høggar borgir Júkagarpar allir.
- In the middle of the garden²⁹
they were so eloquent, then they went to the high castle all of Júki's heroes.
49. Úti í miðjum grasgarði
klæddust í brynju dýra, gingu so í høggu borgir Júkagarpar fyra.
- In the middle of the garden dressed in expensive armour, then they went to the high castles the four heroes of Júki.
50. Tað var Høgnar Júkason, inn um dyrnar steig,
nú sá hann á Guðrunu,
at ilt undir kinnar beið.
- It was Høgnar Júkason,
he stepped through the door,
now he saw from Guðrun, that there was evil hiding on her face.³⁰ 51. Segði tað Høgnar Júkason, inn um dyrnar hyggur:
"Eg síggi tað á Guðrunu, at ilt undir kinnar byggi."
- Høgnar Júkason said, as he looked through the door:
"I see from Guðrun,
that there's evil hiding on her face."

28 Snekkja is a heiti for ship used in ballads.

29 This is formulaic in ballads.

30 This means that she is plotting something and meant them harm; it literally means "it is evil under her cheeks."

52. Guðrun so til orða tekur: “Vit erum nú her aleina, fáíð mær bæði skjöld og svørð öllum tykkum at goyma!”
 Guðrun begins to speak:
 “Now we are here alone, give me both shield and sword to store for you all!”
53. Svaraði Høgnar Júkason, hann heldur á brúnum knívi: “Frá mær leggi eg ekki skjöld og svørð,
 so leingi eg eri á lívi.” Høgnar Júkason answered,
 he grasps a shining³¹ knife: “I won’t put away my shield and sword, as long as I’m alive.”
54. Guðrun so til orða tekur, hon bar tungu snjalla: “Minnist tú nakað á Sjúrdða unga, tú førði mær til halla[r]?” Guðrun begins to speak,
 she spoke skillfully:
 “Do you remember anything about young Sjúrdður, whom you brought to me in the hall?”
55. Guðrun so til orða tekur, illskan í henni breyt: “Minnist tú nakað Sjúrdð hin unga blóðigan mær í skeyt?”
 Guðrun begins to speak,
 anger wells up inside of her:
 “Do you remember anything about the young Sjúrdður who you laid all bloody in my lap?”³²
56. Guðrun so til orða tekur, ilt undir kinnar beið: “Frægari maður var Sjúrdður kappi, í gullsporunum reið.”
 Guðrun begins to speak,
 there was evil hiding on her face: “Sjúrdður the hero was a better man, who rode in golden spurs.”
57. Guðrun so til orða tekur, bar um hjarta trá: “Enn var Sjúrdður frægari, í gullsaðli lá.”
 Guðrun begins to speak,
 carried grief in her heart: “Sjúrdður was still better, laying in the golden saddle.”³³ 58. Høgnar hugsar so við sær, lítur á ringar reyðar:
 “Ei er blítt á brúnarskoru, minnst á buðlungs deyða.” Høgnar thinks to himself, looking at the red rings: “You’re not in a good mood,³⁴ remembering the king’s death.”

31 The shining reflects how sharp it is.

32 This happens in Brynhildar tátur, stt. 257–258.

33 Guðrun is saying Sjúrdður was a better man than them even when he was dead.

34 Brúnaskor is the mark between the brows, or the furrowed brow. This literally means that they don’t look happy (blíður) with a furrowed brow.

59. Høgnar mælir fyrri sær, lítur á ringin sín:
“Ei er blítt á brúnarskoru, minnist á buðlungu lík.”
- Høgnar mutters to himself, glancing at his ring.³⁵ “You’re not in a good mood, if you’re remembering the king’s corpse.” 60. Inn kemur Guðrun árla morgun, ilt er skap at eggja,
borð stóð breitt við silkidúk, og bjór fyrri reystar seggjjar.
- Guðrun comes in early in the morning, one should not provoke a person of evil disposition,
the table was set with a silk tablecloth, and beer for brave men.³⁶ 61. Inn kom Guðrun árla morgun við hógv og hyggið orð: “Kastið nú vákn og herklæði, tær stígið yvir borð!”
- Guðrun came in early in the morning
with restraint and cautious words: “Discard your weapons and your armour now, you step over the table!”³⁷
62. Svaraði Høgnar Júkason,
hann var dreingja maki: “Sjálvir skulum vit váknini goyma, osum til at taka.”
- Høgnar Júkason answered,
he was the equal³⁸ of the heroes: “We shall keep the weapons ourselves, for us to take.”
63. Drekka teir í Húnalandi bæði úti og inni, drekka mjøð og kláran vín glaðir á hvørjum sinni.
- They drink in Húnaland
both inside and outside, they drink mead and clear wine happy on every occasion.
64. Drekka teir í Húnalandi bæði við gleði og gaman, illa líkar Guðrunu,
at einki nertur saman.
- They drink in Húnaland
with both joy and delight, Guðrun doesn’t like
that there is no conflict.
65. Drekka teir í tríggjar dagar bæði við gleði og gleim,
illa líkar Guðrunu,
at einki nertur teim.
- They drink for three days with both joy and cheerfulness, Guðrun doesn’t like,
that there is no conflict.
66. Guðrun lokkar sín unga son við so miklum mæti: “Eg skal geva tær gull og fæ, stillar tú Høgnar av kæti.”
- Guðrun coaxes her young son with such great authority: “I shall give you gold and property, if you silence Høgnar’s laughter.”

35 He is looking down, ashamed.

36 Seggur is a word used in ballads for a man, warrior, or hero.

37 She wants them to sit at the table unarmed.

38 Maki means peer or equal.

67. Guðrun lokkar sín unga son, í duldum hon hann bað,
hann gekk sær at borðinum, sum Høgnar fyri sat. Guðrun coaxes her young son, she tells him in secret to do it, he went to the table,
where Høgnar sat.
68. Guðrun lokkar sín unga son,
í duldum hon hann dró,
hann hevði upp sína høggu hond, Høgnar á nasar sló. Guðrun coaxes her young son, she lured him in secret,
he lifted his right hand,
he punched Høgnar on the nose.
69. Sveinur var ungur av aldrinum, hann taldist, tá ið hon bað,
hann gekk aftur at borðinum,
sum Høgnar fyri sat. The boy was young of age, he declined when she told him to,³⁹ he went back to the table,
where Høgnar sat.
70. Hann gekk aftur at borðinum, á Høgnar nasar sló,
voldi tað Guðrun Júkadóttir, drykkjan varð óró. He went back to the table, and punched Høgnar on the nose, Guðrun Júkadóttir caused it,
the drinking was disturbed.
71. Høgna rann tað heita blóð bæði úr nøsum og munnin, kappin varð so illa við, hann ikki við slíkt kundi. Hot blood ran from Høgnar from both the nose and the mouth, the hero was so shocked, he couldn't let that one go.
72. "Eg fá ei í Húnalandi drukkið tann mjøðin við grandin, ótakk havi tann móðirin, ið so sín son upp vandi." "In Húnaland I'm not able to drink the mead without harm, that mother does not have my thanks for raising her son like that." 73. Høgnar fram um borðið leyp við berum spjóti í hendi, mækin sneiddi búk og bein, íggjøgnum sveinin rendi. Høgnar leapt over the table brandishing a spear in his hand, the sword⁴⁰ cut through stomach and bone, it ran through the boy.
74. Tað var Høgnar Júkason,
sínnum svørði brá,
hann tók hennara unga son, hjó honum bulin frá. It was Høgnar Júkason, who brandished his sword,
he took her young son,
he hacked his torso off.

39 At first, he is hesitant to take action and doesn't want to, but Guðrun forces him to. This points back to her authority.

40 Mæki is a heiti used in the ballads for "sword."

75. Høgnar tók sín búgvín brand, sneiðir bulin frá,
kastar høvdið á hallargól, so Artala kongur sá.
- Høgnar took his readied sword, and cut the torso off,
he throws the head on the hall floor,
so that King Artala saw it.
76. Guðrun gekk for Artala kong, sigur honum frá: “Deyður er okra ungi sonur, helst av Høgna ráð.
- Guðrun went before King Artala, and tells him:
“Our young son is dead, probably Høgnar’s doing.
77. Eg man ei í Húnalandi longur við tær stýra, um tú gert ikki nakrar sòmdir eftir tann dreingin dýra.”
- I will not rule Húnaland with you any longer,
if you don’t take redress
for that dear boy.”
78. “Hoyr tú tað, mín veldiga søta, lat nú tað so vera,
sjálvur er hann tín onkarbróðir,
eg kann honum einki gera.”
- “Listen, my dearly beloved,
let it be,
he is himself your dear brother;⁴¹
I can’t harm him.”
79. “Tú skalt ikki, Artala kongur, leingi ríki stýra,
vilt tú ongar sòmdir taka
eftir tann dreingin dýra.”
- “King Artala, you won’t rule this kingdom for long,
if you don’t take redress
for that dear boy.” 80. “Hoyr tú, Guðrun søta mín, tað vil eg ei trúgva,
at tú vilt nú tínum brøðrum svik til handar snúgva.
- “Listen, Guðrun my sweet,
I can’t believe,
that you now
want to deceive your brothers.
81. Tá ið teir vógu hann Sjúrd sveisn, Guðrun søta mín,
tá vóru Gíslar og Jarnar børn heima hjá móður sín.”
- When they killed the young Sjúrdur, Guðrun my sweet,
Gíslar and Jarnar were children
at home with their mother.”
82. Guðrun so til orða tekur:
“Tað skal eg nú valda,
Gíslar og hann Jarnar ungi báðir skulu gjalda.”
- Guðrun then spoke:
“It is my decision now, that Gíslar and young Jarnar shall both pay.”
83. Mælti tað Guðrun Júkadóttir: “Tað man einki saka,
Gíslar og Jarnar og allar brøður skal eg av lívi taka.”
- Guðrun Júkadóttir spoke:
“It doesn’t matter,
Gíslar and Jarnar and all my brothers
I shall take their lives.”

41 Onka- is used to denote a favourite of something, the most loved.

84. “Tað er einki eykarverk
at ganga Høgna ímóti,
hvar ið hann kemur í víggj at standa,
har hevur hann høvur á spjóti.
- “It is no easy feat
to go against Høgnar,
whenever he comes into battle, he has a head on a spear.⁴²” 85. Hoyr tú tað, mín veldiga søta, legg sjálv til tess ráð, hvussu vit skulu teir miklu menn burtur av lívi fá!”
- Listen to this, my dearly beloved, make a plot yourself,
how shall we
take the lives of these mighty men!”⁴³ 86. “Taka skal tríggjar aldirshúðir, rýða tær í blóði,
falla so tungt á Júkagarpar, troyttir av miklum móði.”
- “You shall take three skins,⁴⁴ smear them with blood, attack Júki’s heroes so ferociously, tired from great anger.” 87. Guðrun stendur fyri breiðum borði, mælir um tann vanda:
“Nú skulu tit, Júkagarpar, á aldirshúðir ganga.”
- Guðrun stands before the wide table,
speaking about that danger: “Now you, Júki’s heroes, shall walk on the skins.”
88. Upp steig Høgnar Júkason, tungu bar hann so snjalla, talar yvir breiða borð
fyri teir brøður allar.
- Høgnar Júkason stood up,
he was so eloquent,
speaking over the wide table to all the brothers.
89. Upp steig Høgnar Júkason, blandað hevði vín:
“Gíslar og Jarnar fara báðir
aftur til móður sín.”
- Høgnar Júkason stood up,
he had mixed wine:
“Gíslar and Jarnar both go back to their mother.”
90. Upp steig Høgnar Júkason, letur so orðum svara:
“Gíslar og Jarnar fara báðir
aftur í Júkagarðar.”
- Høgnar Júkason stood up,
answered with these words: “Gíslar and Jarnar both go back to the court of Júki.”

42 This echoes Brynhildar táttur, stt. 182–183, when Brynhild is telling Høgnar to kill Sjúrdur and he replies that it is very difficult to kill him.

43 This echoes Brynhildar táttur, st. 185, when Høgnar asks Brynhild for a plan on how to kill Sjúrdur.

44 The skins are slippery, and walking over them is a test. If they fall, they will be easier to kill. Aldirshúð is an unusual word and is likely related to Old Norse ǫldungahúð/ǫldungshúð. An ǫldungr is an old bull, so it is probably the skin of an old bull.

91. Guðrun stendur fyri breiðum borði,
mælir um tann vanda:
“Gíslar og hann Jarnar ungi, allir skulu ganga.” 92. “Gíslar og hann Jarnar ungi
vóru ikki hjá, Gunnar og eg Høgnar
vóru teir, Sjúrdin vá.
93. Gunnar og eg Høgnar tóku Sjúrða av lívi,
tá vóru Gíslar og Jarnar børn heima hjá móður síni.
94. Gunnar og eg Høgnar vógu tann kappan reysta, Gíslar og hann Jarnar ungi ikki harav vistu.
95. Gunnar og eg Høgnar vit vógu Sjúrða við listi, tá vóru Gíslar og Jarnar børn, lógú hjá móðurs brósti.”
96. Gíslar og hann Jarnar mundu á húðir ganga, allir sóu teir falla niður, eingin sá teir upp standa.
97. Guðrun stendur fyri breiðum borði,
mælir um tann vanda:
“Nú skal Gunnar bróðir mín aftur á húðir ganga.”
98. Tað var Gunnar Júkason, hann mundi á húðir ganga, allir sóu hann niður falla, eingin sá hann upp standa.
- Guðrun stands before the wide table,
speaks of that danger: “Gíslar and young Jarnar,
all shall walk.”⁴⁵
- “Gíslar and young Jarnar
weren’t there,
Gunnar and I, Høgnar,
were the ones that slew Sjúrdur.
- Gunnar and I, Høgnar,
took Sjúrdur’s life,
Gíslar and Jarnar were children then
at home with their mother.
- Gunnar and I, Høgnar, slew that mighty hero,
Gíslar and young Jarnar didn’t know anything about it.
- Gunnar and I, Høgnar,
we slew Sjúrdur with cunning, Gíslar and Jarnar were children then, laying at their mother’s breast.”
- Gíslar and Jarnar
walked on the skins,
all saw them fall down,
no one saw them rise.⁴⁶
- Guðrun stands before the wide table,
speaks about that danger: “Now Gunnar my brother shall walk on the skins again.”
- It was Gunnar Júkason, he walked on the skins,
all saw him fall down,
no one saw him rise.

45 Guðrun demands that all her brothers shall walk across the skins. Høgnar has realized that his younger brothers are in danger and is trying to save them.

46 The children have been killed.

99. Guðrun stendur fyri breiða borði,
nú ber hon kinn so reyðan: “Hoyr tú, Høgnar bróðir mín, nú hevni eg Sjúrdar deyða.”
Guðrun stands before the wide table,
her cheeks are now so red: “Listen, Høgnar my brother,
now I’m avenging the death of Sjúrdur.” 100. Upp steig Høgnar Júkason, brandin yvir seg bar,
so er mæR av sonnum sagt,
slíkt gongur hans hugi nær.
Høgnar Júkason stood up, carried the sword above himself,⁴⁷ so I’ve been truthfully told, such things touch a nerve.⁴⁸
101. Guðrun stendur fyri breiða borði, kinn ber hon so balda: “Nú skal Høgnar bróðir mín aftur á húðir ganga.”
Guðrun stands before the wide table,
her cheeks are so bold:⁴⁹ “Now Høgnar my brother will walk on the skins again.” 102. “Betri var í Júkagørðum at drekka tann mjøð í blandi, enn sum at ganga á aldir[s]húðir og standa í stórum vanda.” “It would have been better to be at the court of Júki
to drink that mixed mead, than to walk on the skins and be in great danger.” 103. Høgnar tekur nú brandin tann, vil eg fyri tygur tína, gongur so í loftið fram, hann mintist á móður sína.
Høgnar now takes that sword, I’ll tell you about it,⁵⁰ he then walks forward with it in the air,⁵¹ he was remembering his mother.⁵² 104. Upp steig Høgnar Júkason, heldur á dragið svørð: “Eg skal ganga á aldirshúðir, og vita, hvussu fer.”
Høgnar Júkason stood up,
grasping a brandished sword: “I shall walk on the skins, and see how it goes.” 105. Høgnar gekk á aldirshúðir, nú mundi tað so vera,
ikki bar nú fóturin við,
tað tykti honum einki at gera.
Høgnar walked on the skins, now it seemed to be that the foot didn’t touch it,⁵³ it didn’t seem to effect him.

47 Høgnar is carrying the sword above himself because he is angry and defensive.

48 Høgnar is upset because Guðrun has killed his brothers.

49 This means she is displaying a lot of courage.

50 This is the narrator speaking.

51 Høgnar is still holding the sword above him. This is presumably so that if he falls, he will still have his sword above himself to defend himself.

52 Either he is remembering his mother’s warning or thinking about how sad his mother would be to lose all her children.

53 Høgnar did not fall. It would appear he jumped over the skins if his foot wasn’t touching them.

106. Tað var Høgnar Júkason, hann ræð yvir húðir stokka: “Ei mundi eg í Húnalandi fyrstur undan røkka.”
- It was Høgnar Júkason,
he leapt over the skins:
“In Húnaland I would not be the first one to yield.”
107. Tað var Høgnar Júkason, hann tekur við húðir at støðga: “Ei man eg í Húnalandi tann fyrsta undan røkka.”
- It was Høgnar Júkason,
he stops by the skins:⁵⁴ “In Húnaland I would not be the first one to yield.” 108. Guðrun kemur út árla morgun, gramt var henni í huga,
heilán sær hon Høgnar standa,
ei hava ráðini dugað.
- Guðrun comes out early in the morning,
she was angry,
she sees Høgnar standing unharmed, her schemes hadn’t worked.
109. Høgnar stendur í grasgarði, bindur upp hjálmin sín: “Áðrenn dagur at kvøldi kemur, drekka vit blóð sum vín.”
- Høgnar stands in the garden, fastening his helmet:
“Before the day becomes evening, we’ll drink blood like wine.”
110. Árla var um morgunin, tað roðar fyri sól, tá hevði Guðrun Júkadóttir
brynjað út hundrað tólv.
- Early in the morning
the sun is rising,
Guðrun Júkadóttir had then armoured twelve hundred men.
111. Árla var um morgunin, sólin skín á grótið,
tað var Høgnar Júkason,
hann ríður teim øllum ímóti.
- Early in the morning,
the sun shone on the rocks,
it was Høgnar Júkason,
he rides against them all.
112. Tað var Høgnar Júkason, ríður teimum øllum ímóti,
búkar fullu á jørðina,
sum tey varpa gróti.
- It was Høgnar Júkason,
he rides against them all,
innards fell to the ground, as they throw rocks.
113. Høgnar ríður í bardagin, roynir góðar gripir,
niður feldi hann kongins menn,
tíggju fyri hvørja sipan.
- Høgnar rides into battle, uses good arms,⁵⁵
he felled the king’s men,
ten with every swipe.

54 He hesitates.

55 Høgnar is literally using precious treasures or things; this likely indicates that he is using fancy, adorned weaponry.

114. Hundar tutu, úlvar goyggja, ørnin hyggi læsti,
hundrað heilt og hartil hált tað fellur í annað kastið. Dogs howled, wolves bark,⁵⁶ the eagle locked its sight, an entire hundred and half again fall in the second attack.
115. Vigið fekk hann Húnamenn við svørð og bitrar eggjar,
tað var Høgnar Júkason, hann hopar til hallarveggja. He slew the Huns with sword and bitter edges,
it was Høgnar Júkason,
he retreats to the walls of the hall.
116. Guðrun kemur út árla morgun, sól tók fagurt at branda, heilan sær hon bróður sín á leikvøllinum ganga. Guðrun comes out early in the morning, the sun is shining beautifully, she sees her brother unharmed walking on the battlefield.
117. Guðrun so til orða tekur, sólin brá tá víða:
“Hoyr tú, Høgnar bróðir mín, tú skalt á skóginn ríða. Guðrun then speaks, the sun was shining far and wide: “Listen, Høgnar my brother,
you shall ride to the forest.
118. Tú skalt ríða á skógin burtur, eystur um Lindará,
har skalt tú tey undur síggja, sum tú í forðum vá.” You shall ride away to the forest, east of the Lindará,
there you will see those wonders, that you slew in the past.”
119. Árla var um morgunin, sólin fagurt rann,
tað var Høgnar Júkason, hann ríður á skógin fram. Early in the morning, the sun shone beautifully,
it was Høgnar Júkason,
he rides through the forest.
120. Høgnar ríður á skógin fram, eystur um Lindará,
har mundi hann tey undur síggja, hann í forðum vá. Høgnar rides through the forest,
east of the Lindará,
there he would see those wonders, that he slew in the past.
121. Har sá hann tann stóra hest leypa sær av grundum,
voldi tað Guðrun Júkadóttir, ið illgerningar kundi. There he saw that great horse leap off the ground,
Guðrun Júkadóttir caused it,
who knew witchcraft.
122. Tungan tók at tala, letur so orðum víkja: “Ílla gjørði tú, Høgnar, tá tú vart við meg at svíkja. He began to speak,⁵⁷ saying these words:
“It was an evil deed you did, Høgnar, when you betrayed me.”⁵⁸

56 This is backwards—it is dogs that bark and wolves that howl.

57 Literally “the tongue started to speak.”

58 The dead Sjúrdur is speaking from the saddle of the horse.

123. Mær unti Brynhild Buðlins dóttir, Brynhild Buðlin's daughter loved me, tað hitt væna vív, that beautiful woman,

a whole hundred and half again they fell in the second attack.⁶⁶
135. Høgnar ríður í bardagin: “Hetta man lítið bata, tað, ið eg um dagin vegi, villir hon upp um nætur.”
Høgnar rides into battle:
“This makes little difference, those who I slay during the day she brings back to life at night.” 136. Høgnar ríður í bardagin, har yppist ein illur siður: “Nú leiðist mær í Húnalandi at høgga teir trælir niður.” Høgnar rides into battle,
evil⁶⁷ is arising there: “In Húnaland I'm fed up of chopping down slaves.” 137. Tað var Guðrun Júkadóttir, talar til sveinin sín: “Gakk til Tíðrik Tatlarason, og bið hann koma til mín.”
It was Guðrun Júkadóttir,
speaking to her servant: “Go to Tíðrikur Tatlarason, and ask him to come to me.” 138. Sveinur fór á skógin burtur
við hógv og hyggið orð: “Guðrun bað tygum koma til sín at drekka yvir borð.”
The servant went to the forest with restraint and cautious words: “Guðrun asks you come to her to drink over the table.”

63 This repeats st. 111.

64 This repeats st. 112.

66 This repeats st. 114.

67 Literally “an evil custom.”

139. Tað var Guðrun Júkadóttir, letur nú blanda vín, býður so Tíðriki Tatlarasoni í hallina inn til sín.
- It was Guðrun Júkadóttir,
she has wine mixed,
then welcomes Tíðrikur Tatlarason to her in the hall.
140. “Ver vælkomín, Tíðrikur Tatlarason, fullvæl eg á teg troysti, hevði tú Høgnar av lívi tikið, tað var eitt manndómsroynsi.”
- “Welcome Tíðrikur Tatlarason, I trust in you wholly,
had you taken Høgnar’s life,
it would be a manly deed.” 141. “Hoyr tú, Guðrun Júkadóttir, eyka mær ei tann vanda, hvussu skal eg mót Høgnari stríða, ið einki vákn kann granda?”
- “Listen, Guðrun Júkadóttir, don’t put me in such danger, how should I fight against Høgnar, whom no weapons can hurt?” 142. “Hoyr tú, Tíðrikur Tatlarason, tú ert ein kempa so sterk, hevði tú Høgnar av lívi fingið, tað var eitt manndómsverk.”
- “Listen, Tíðrikur Tatlarason, you are a hero so strong,
had you taken Høgnar’s life,
it would be a manly deed.” 143. “Tað er einki eykarverk
at ganga Høgna ímóti:
hvar ið hann kemur á vágarrøll,
har hevur hann høvur á spjóti.
- “It is no easy feat
to go against Høgnar:
wherever he comes on the battlefield, he has a head on his spear.”⁶⁸ 144. Tað er ikki ein ella tveir, standa í tí verki,
eingin møtir honum á jørð,
deyður er Sjúrdur sterki.
- It is not one or two,
that succeed in that deed,
none on earth are his equal,
the strong Sjúrdur is dead.
145. Mangur hevur lívið latið
- sigist í hesum kvæði -
eingin møtir honum á jørð, deyður er Sjúrdur frægi.”
- Many have lost their lives
- it is said in this ballad - none on earth are his equal, the valiant Sjúrdur is dead.” 146. Tíðrikur upp frá borði stígur, hann tekur um brandin svarta:
“Eg vinni einki á Høgnari.” Nú gránaði drottning bjarta.
- Tíðrikur stands up from the table,
he grasps the black sword:
“I won’t win against Høgnar.” Now the beautiful queen went grey.”⁶⁹

68 Cf. what is said about both Sjúrdur in Brynhildar táttur, st. 177, and about Høgnar in Høgnar táttur, st. 84, 69 She went pale.

147. “Hoyr tú, Tíðrikur Tatlarason,” brúður mælir av kvíða, “eg gevi tær bæði gull og fæ, vilt tú mót Høgnari ríða.”

he was like black soot, he had injured many men, but now there was a sword in his heart.⁷²

70 The Faroese says “strings” not “wings,” but this does not seem to make sense. It could be a misremembering of the word, which would be veingir. Streingir probably crept in due to the alliteration with stríðu. Lyngbye also translates it as wings. Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 278n151.

71 This must refer to armour.

72 This stanza is referring to the dragon (Tíðrikur).

155. Eitur spýði tann svartu dregi niður á Høgna brynju, hann varð ei við váknum vigin, fyri tað læt hann synja.
- The black dragon spewed poison down on Høgnar's armour, he was not slain with weapons, that he would refuse.
156. Tungt er tað í heiminum størri sorgir at bíða, eitur bar hann í brynju síni, so fast í hjarta at sviða.
- It is difficult in the world to wait for a greater sorrow,⁷³ he carried poison in his armour it burns his heart severely.
157. Høgnar so til orða tekur:
"Eg berjist ikki longur, eitur gongur at hjartanum."
Tá fólnaði nýtur drongur.
- Høgnar begins to speak:
"I fight no longer, poison flows towards my heart."
Then the brave hero went pale.
158. Fallnir eru Húnamenn við svørð og bitrar eggjar, nú hopaði frægi av Júkagørpum so fast til hallarveggja.
- Huns have fallen
by sword and bitter edges, now the valiant hero of Júki is forced back firmly to the walls of the hall.⁷⁴ 159. Guðrun kemur út árla morgun,
gramt var henni í huga,
heilán sær hon Høgnar standa,
ei hava svikini dugað.
- Guðrun comes out early in the morning,
she was angry,
she sees Høgnar standing unharmed,⁷⁵ the schemes haven't worked.
160. Høgnar hopaði at hallarveggi brandin yvir seg bar,
Guðrun stendur í grasgarði, hon tennur saman skar.
- Høgnar was leaning on the walls of the hall, carrying his sword above himself, Guðrun stands in the garden,
she grinds her teeth together.
161. "Hoyr tú, Guðrun systir mín, tað skalt tú mær lova,
læna mær Helvík jallsins dóttur
í nátt á armi at sova!
- "Listen, Guðrun my sister,
this you will permit me,
lend me Helvík the jarl's daughter to sleep in her arms tonight!
162. Ikki havi eg fingið sár, nú grið vil eg ei tiggja, læna mær eina jall[s]dóttur í nátt á armi at liggja!"
- I have not received a wound,⁷⁶ now I will not be given mercy,⁷⁷
lend me a jarl's daughter to lie in her arms tonight!"

73 This anticipates Høgnar's death.

74 This echoes st. 115. This may mean that he is standing using the walls as support.

75 Although the audience knows that Høgnar has been harmed, Guðrun does not know that.

76 Høgnar is lying. He knows he is going to die.

77 He will not be allowed to leave alive.

163. Høgnar so aftur til orða tekur: “Tann grið eg av tær tiggja, læna mær Helvík jallsins dóttur
 í nátt av harmi at liggja!”
 Then Høgnar began to speak again:
 “That favour I will ask of you,
 lend me Helvík the jarl’s daughter to lie with due to distress tonight!”⁷⁸ 164. Guðrun so fyri munnri mælir, kinn ber hon so reyða: “Fáa skalt tú nú jallsins dóttur, tú gongur nú snart til deyða.” Guðrun then speaks,
 her cheeks are so red:
 “Now you shall get the jarl’s daughter, you’ll be dead soon.” 165. Lógu tey í sínari song við allskyns spekt og mæti: “Vit eiga osum ein ungan son, til gulls og landa at gæta.” They lay in their bed with all kinds of good sense and good reputation:
 “We shall have ourselves a young son, to inherit the gold and lands.” 166. Hann gat við frúnni ungan son á teirri somu nátt, Høgnar risti rúnirnar,
 og tað man lesast brátt.
 He conceived a young son with the woman on the same night,
 Høgnar carved the runes, and it is read immediately.⁷⁹ 167. “Tú manst ognast ungan son, Høgnar skalt tú kalla, eg gevi honum tað búna svørð, ið faðir mín søkti úr fjalli.
 “You will have a young son,
 you shall call him Høgnar,
 I give him the splendid sword, that my father got from inside the mountain.
168. Hoyr tú, Helvík jallsins dóttir, hvat eg nú sigi til tín, síggj so til, um ei langa tíð hann hevur faðir sín.
 Listen, Helvík daughter of the jarl,
 what I now tell you,
 see to it that in not too long
 he avenges his father.
169. Hoyr tú, Helvík jallsins dóttir, eg sigi tey orðini hátt, nú hevur kongurin sveinsbarn gitið á hesi somu nátt.
 Listen, Helvík daughter of the jarl,
 I’m telling you these words proudly, the king has conceived a boychild on this same night.
170. ú manst ognast ungan son, Guðrun vil hann pína,
 tak tú hennara unga son,
 og legg í vøggju tína!
 You will have a young son,
 Guðrun will torment him, take her young son,
 and put him in your cradle!

78 She should be allowed to lie with him due to the stress or distress of the situation.

79 This likely means that the inscription was obvious and could be read without difficulty. It has to be read quickly because he is dying.

171. Hojr tú, Helvík jallsins dóttir, brúka nakra list,
lat mína systur Guðruna um dyrnar ganga fyrst!
172. Hojr tú, Helvík jallsins dóttir,
eg sigi tær satt ífrá:
tá ið svein er tólv ár gamal, tú gakk fyri Lindará!
173. Hojr tú tað, mín veldiga søta, eg tali tey orð til tín, tá ið tín sonur er tólv ár gamal, tá kennir hann móður sína.
174. Tak tú hetta rúnarbelti, bint um tínar lendar,
tað kann øllum lásum læsa,
allar sútir rinda.”
175. Tá segði Høgnar Júkason: “Nú verst ikki longur, nú gongur eitrið at hjartanum.”
So fólnaði nýtur drongur.
176. Høgnar leyt tá lata lív, búðu um hann sum dreyg, vældu nú um so virðiliga, løgdu nú lík í heyg.
177. Helvík leyt tá síggja á, Høgnar mundi doyggja, síðan grón hon tann dreyg í heyg, sum dreingir dalin hoyggja.
- Listen, Helvík daughter of the jarl,
use some cunning,
let my sister Guðrun walk through the door first!
- Listen, Helvík daughter of the jarl,
I tell you truthfully:
when the boy is twelve years old,
walk to the Lindará!
- Listen, my dearly beloved,
I speak these words to you, when your son is twelve years old, he will recognize his mother.
- Take this runic belt, fasten it around your hips,
it can lock all locks,
and drive away all sorrows.”
- Høgnar Júkason then said:
“Now it’s not bearable any longer, now the poison flows to my heart.”
Then the brave hero died.
- Then Høgnar had to lose his life, they dressed his corpse,
now cared for so carefully, they laid the corpse in a mound.⁸⁰
- Helvík then had to look on,
Høgnar was dying,
then she buried that corpse in a mound, that boys in the valley make hay on.

Refrain Grani bar gullið av heiði,
brá hann sínum brandi av reiði,
Sjúrdur vann av orminum,
Grani bar gullið av heiði.

*Grani carried the gold from the heath,
he brandished his blade in a fury,
Sjúrdur defeated the dragon,
Grani carried the gold from the heath.*

⁸⁰ This is a barrow, or burial mound.

THE SECOND BALLAD OF HØGNI OR THE BALLAD OF ALDRIAS (ANNAR HØGNA TÁTTUR OR ALDRIAS TÁTTUR)

- | | |
|--|--|
| 1. Tær ganga sær við börnunum nú mánar sínar,
til at teirri stundum líður,
tær fœða sveinar fríðar. | They are pregnant for nine months each,
until that time arrives,
they give birth to beautiful boys. ¹ |
| 2. Helvík ungan sonin ár, tung mundi sorgin falla,
síðan það hon presti bera,
Høgnar það hon kalla. | Helvík has a young son, great grief will befall them, ²
then she ordered him to be carried to the priest, she ordered him to be called Høgnar. |
| 3. Guðrun ungan sonin ár, tung man sorgin falla,
síðan það hon presti bera,
Svein það móðir kalla. | Guðrun had a young son, great grief will befall them,
then she ordered him to be carried to the priest,
the mother ordered him to be called Svein. ³ |
| 4. Lógu tær í síni song, lætta tekur vanda,
nú er liðið at teirri tíð,
báðar skulu út ganga. | They lie each in their beds,
the pain subsides,
now that time has come,
both shall go outside. |
| 5. Inni sótu tær í dagar, inni sótu tær í tvá,
inntil tann hin triðja,
tær skuldu út gá. | They sat inside for days, they sat inside for two,
until the third,
they should go outside. |
| 6. Tað er Guðrun Júkadóttir, brúkar mikla list,
biður nú Helvík jallsins dóttur
at durum ganga fyrst. | That is Guðrun Júkadóttir, uses great cunning,
now asks Helvík, daughter of the jarl, to walk to the door first. |
| 7. Guðrun so til orða tekur,
fyrsta orðið tá:
“Hoyr tú, Helvík jalsins dóttir, tú skalt út fyrri gá.” | Then Guðrun begins to speak,
the first word:
“Listen, Helvík, daughter of the jarl, you shall go out first.” |

1 This follows on from the action in Høgnar táttur, where Helvík and Guðrun seem to be pregnant at the same time.

2 This foreshadows what will come.

3 Svein is written with a lowercase s in the edition.

8. Svaraði Helvík jallsins dóttir, læt tá angist og vanda: “Tú bert hægri høvur enn eg, fyri bør tær at ganga.” Helvík, daughter of the jarl, answered, she sounded afraid and troubled: “You have a higher head than me,⁴ you ought to go out first.”
9. Svaraði Helvík jallsins dóttir í annað orðið tá:
“Tú bert hægri krónu enn eg, tú mást út fyri gá.”
Helvík, the daughter of the jarl, said secondly:
“You are wearing a higher crown than I, you must go out first.” 10. Hon átti sær ein ungan son, Guðrun vildi hann pína, hon tók hennara egna son, legði aftur í vøggju sína.
She had a young son,
Guðrun wanted to cause him pain,
she took her own son, laid him back in his crib.⁵ 11. Guðrun mundi út ganga fyrst, øllum tykti undur,
hon tók hennara unga son,
beit honum barkan sundur.
Guðrun went out first,
everyone found it strange, she took her young son,⁶ she cut his throat.⁷
12. Árla var um morgunin,
sól tók fagurt at skína, Guðrun sneiðir høvur av onkarbarni sínum.
It was early in the morning,
the sun began to shine beautifully, Guðrun cuts the head off her dear child.⁸
13. Inn kom Guðrun árla morgun,
fell so væl í lag,
hon tók út sín lítin knív,
hon sneiddi høvdið av.
Guðrun came in early in the morning,
it came so easily to her,
she took out her small knife, she cut the head off.
14. So er sagt frá Høgnari, Gud gav honum vekst,
meiri vaks hann í ein mánað,
enn onnur børn í seks.
So it is told about Høgnar, God made him grow,
he grew more in one month,
than other children in six.⁹

4 She is telling her she is higher in status or standing than her and should go out first.

5 Guðrun has gone out first, and Helvík takes the opportunity to switch their babies.

6 Grammatically it is clear that Guðrun is cutting the throat of what she believes to be Helvík's son, not her own.

7 It is implied here by sundr that not only does she cut his throat, but she actually cuts it in two, cutting his head off, as confirmed by the following stanza.

8 Grammatically it is now made clear that Guðrun has actually cut the head off her own child, believing it to be Helvík's child. That Helvík has effected Høgnar's plan, laid out at the end of Høgnar táttur, to save the life of their child is thus conveyed grammatically in the ballad.

9 This echoes the description of Sjúrdur growing in Regin smiður.

15. Hann vaks upp í ríkinum, tann geviliga mann, Húnalandskongurinn
fostraði hann. He grew up in the kingdom, the valiant man,
the king of Húnaland
fostered him.
16. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin fagurt brá,
tað var Helvík jallsins dóttir,
hon ríður til Lindará. It was early in the morning, the sun shines beautifully, it was Helvík, daughter of the jarl, she rides to the Lindará.
17. Tað var Helvík jallsins dóttir,
so ganga søgur frá,
møtti hon sínum unga soni eystan fyri Lindará. It was Helvík, daughter of the jarl, so the story goes,
she met her young son,
east of the Lindará.¹⁰
18. Helvík so til orða tekur, smílist undir lín:
“Tað svørji eg á sannan Gud, at tú ert sonur mín.” Helvík began to speak, smiling under the linen: “I swear by the true God, that you are my son.”
19. Sváraði Høgnar Høgnason, hann stendur í mannamúgva: “Eg havi ikki sætt eina lágari konu kunna so væl at lúgva.” Høgnar Høgnason answered, he stands in a crowd of people: “I have not seen a woman of a lower class be able to lie so well.” 20. “Tak tú út tín lítin knív, hygg, ið væl hann bítur, tína móður í armin sker, vita, um [í] hjarta nítur!” “Take out your little knife, see how well it cuts,
it cuts¹¹ your mother in the arm, see whether it pains you.” 21. Hann dró út sín lítin knív, hyggur, væl hann beit,
sína móður í armin skar, so fast í hjarta neit. He pulled out his little knife, looks, it cuts well,
it cut his mother in the arm,
it pained him terribly.
22. Sváraði Høgnar Høgnason,
smílist undir lín:
“Tað siggi eg á sjálvum mær, at tú ert móðir mín.” Høgnar Høgnason answered, smiles under the linen:
“I feel it in myself,
that you are my mother.”

10 Following Høgnar’s plan in Høgnar táttur, we must assume the ballad has jumped forward twelve years here.

11 The words for cut in this stanza are different in the Faroese, the first from bíta and the second from skera.

23. Helvík so til orða tekur, smílist undir lín:
“Síggi so til um ei langa tíð, tú hevnir faðir tín!”
- Helvík then begins to speak,
smiles under the linen:
“See to it that in not too long you avenge your father!” 24. Hon tekur upp tað rúnarkelvi, sínnum soni fær:
“Hetta gav tín hin sæli faðir, ið mikið gott unti mær.”
- She takes the runestick, gives it to her son:
“Your dear father gave this to me, who loved me dearly.”¹² 25. Sveinur tók við rúnarkelvi, niður fyri seg sá,
brast hans belti,
litin ið hann brá.
- The boy took the runestick,
he looked down before him, his belt burst,¹³
colour flamed from his face.
26. Brast hans belti,
litin ið hann brá,
hann sá sín hin faðirs deyða standa har uppá.
- His belt burst,
colour flamed from his face,
he saw his father’s death,¹⁴ it tells here.
27. “Tak tú hetta rúnarbelti,
bint um tínar lendar,
tað kann øllum lásum læsa
allar sútir rinda.
- “Take this runebelt,
tie it round your hips,
it can lock all locks,
drive away all sorrows.
28. Tá tú kemur til hallar heim, síðla ella snimma,
síggi so til í langa tíð, lat ongan á tær finna!”
- When you come home to the hall, late or early,
see to it that for a long time, let no one find you!”
29. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin skein so víða,
tað var Høgnar *Høgnason,
hann vildi til hallar ríða.
- It was early in the morning,
the sun shone far and wide,
it was Høgnar Høgnason,
he wanted to ride to the hall.
30. Sveinur gekk í hallina inn, hann skuldi ljósið skara, brendi gjøgnum fótarmblað, hann tók seg ikki vara.
- The boy went into the hall,
he should trim the light,
it burnt through his foot,¹⁵ he wasn’t being careful.

12 This echoes the scene where Hjördis gives Sjúrdur the broken pieces of Sigmundur’s sword in Regin smiður.

13 In Old Norse literature, legendary heroes and gods swell when extremely emotional.

14 The runestick is evidently magical and is able to show him the past event.

15 The fótarmblað is the surface of the foot.

31. Sveinur var ungur av aldrinum, hann skuldi skara ljós, brendi gjøgnum fótarblað, og niður í hallargól.
- The boy was young of age,
he should trim the light,
it burnt through his foot,
and down to the floor of the hall.
32. Artala kongur til orða tekur, mjøður í blandi rennur: “Hugsa nú ekki, svein, so djúpt, tú gáar ei, tú brennur.”
- King Artala begins to speak, the mixed mead runs:
“Don’t think so deeply, Svein,¹⁶ you don’t notice that you are burning.” 33. Tí svaraði Artala kongur, *ryður í brósti rennur: “Hvat hugsar tú, svein, so djúpt, tú sansar ei, at tú brennur?”
- Because of that King Artala answered, coughing up phlegm:¹⁷
“What are you thinking about so deeply, Svein, you don’t realize that you’re burning?” 34. “Tað hugsí eg, Artala kongur, at tú eigur miklan eyð, tað verður helst á tínari ævi, at tú tiggur vatn og breyð.”
- “I am thinking, King Artala, that you possess great riches, it will probably happen in your lifetime, that you will have to beg for water and bread.” 35. Tí svaraði Artala kongur: “Eg eigi miklan eyð, tað verður ikki á mínari ævi, eg tiggvi vatn og breyð.”
- Because of this King Artala answered:
“I possess great riches, it won’t happen in my lifetime,
that I will beg for water and bread.” 36. “Tað hugsí eg, harra mín, hóast tú eigur miklan eyð:
tað kann verða á tíni ævi, tú tiggur vatn og breyð.”
- “I am thinking, my lord, even though you possess great riches:
that it can happen in your lifetime,
that you beg for water and bread.” 37. “Tað hugsí eg, harra svein, eg eigi so miklan eyð,
tað verður ikki á míni ævi, eg biði vatn og breyð.
- “I am thinking, master Svein,
I possess such great riches, that it won’t happen in my lifetime, that I ask for water and bread.
38. Mikið eigi eg gull og fæ, hartil annan eyð,
ikki verður tað á mínari ævi, at eg tiggvi vatn og breyð.”
- I possess a lot of gold and property, in addition to other riches,
it won’t happen in my lifetime,
that I beg for water and bread.”

16 The narrator is acknowledging him as Høgnar Høgnason, but the other characters do not know that yet, apart from his mother.

17 The king may be choking on his drink from shock here, seeing the boy he thinks is his son burning.

39. Árla var um morgunin,
sól tók fagurt at skína: “Vilt tú nakað, Artala kongur, í dag á skógvin ríða?”
- It was early in the morning,
the sun began to shine so beautifully: “King Artala, do you want to ride into the forest today?”
40. Árla var um morgunin,
fell so væl í lag,
lysta teir á skógvin burtur, sveinur og kongurinn báðir.
- It was early in the morning,
it came to him so easily, they want to go off to the forest, both the boy and the king.
41. Tað er enn sum ofta fyrr, mangur skortar fíggja, ganga teir til gullbjørgið tað mikla gull at síggja.
- It is yet as often times before, many look at their riches,
they go to the gold cliff, to look at the great quantity of gold.
42. Ríða teir á skógvin burtur, fríðir í huga full,
hann vísti honum á húsið tað, ið ta[k]t var innan við gull.
- They ride off into the forest, carefree in their courage,¹⁸ he showed him that house that was thatched with gold.
43. Tí svaraði Artala kongur
fyrsta orðið tá:
“Hoyr tú tað nú, harra svein, tú skalt her fyrri inn gá.”
- Because of this King Artala answered then said firstly:
“Listen to this, master Svein, you shall walk in first.”¹⁹ 44. Tí svaraði harra svein
í annað orðið tá:
“Tú bert hægri krónuna, tú skalt inn fyrri gá.”
- Because of that master Svein answered, then said secondly:
“You are wearing a higher crown, you shall walk in first.”
45. Artala kongur í Húnalandi inn um dyrnar sá,
tað var inda harra svein,
hann smelti hurð í lás.
- King Artala in Húaland looked around the door, it was dear master Svein,
he slammed the door shut.
46. Sveinur var ungur av aldrinum, lætt var honum til máls,
tað er mær av sonnum sagt,
hann smelti hurð í lás.
- Sveinur was young of age,
he spoke so eloquently,
it is truthfully told to me,
he slammed the door shut.²⁰

18 Here we interpret í huga full akin to Old Norse hugfullr, meaning full of courage.

19 This exchange about walking in first echoes that of Helvík and Guðrun at the beginning of the ballad.

20 Sveinur has trapped Artala in the house.

47. “Bæði eigur tú, Artala kongur, gull og miklan eyð,
tað kann verða á tínari ævi,
at tú tiggur vatn og breyð.” 48. Tað hugsí eg nú, harra mín, hóast tú eigur miklan eyð,
vilt tú nú nakað, Artala kongur, tiggja vatn og breyð?” 49. “Tað hugsí eg, harra svein,
at eg eigi miklan eyð,
gjarna vil eg nú, harra svein, tiggja av tær vatn og breyð.” 50. Høgnar gekk av gullbjørginum eina morgun snimma,
svørji tann eið á mína trú,
har læsti hann kongin inni.
51. Tað var Høgnar Høgnason, mikið gull hann fekk, hann kom ikki aftur í gullbjørgið, fyr enn kongurin skarpur hekk.
52. Høgni gisti sína móður síðla dags á kvøldi, síðan reið hann haðani burtur til kongin í Danaveldi.
53. Tað er satt, ið talað er, mong er konan eym,
Guðrun gongur um allan heim, hon heldur í Grana teym.
- “You, King Artala, possess both gold and great riches,
it can happen in your lifetime,
that you beg for water and bread.
- Now I think, my lord, even though you possess a lot of riches,
do you want, King Artala, to beg for water and bread?”
- “I am thinking that, master Svein, that I possess great riches, now, master Svein, I will gladly beg water and bread from you.”
- Høgnar went from the gold cliff
early one morning,
I swear an oath on my faith,
he locked the king inside.
- It was Høgnar Høgnason,
he got a lot of gold,
he didn’t come back to the gold cliff before the king drooped,²¹ shrivelled up.²²
- Høgnar²³ stayed the night with his dear mother late one evening, then he rode away from there to the king in Denmark.
- It is true what they say, many the woman is wretched, Guðrun walks around the world,
she holds Grani’s reins.

²¹ Hanga means “hang,” but it can also mean drooped or wilted. It seems to mean that here, since there is no indication that King Artala was hanged.

²² The king has died, shrunk, and shrivelled from lack of the water and bread Høgnar has been taunting him about.

²³ Høgni in the Faroese, rather than Høgnar, is a mistake in CCF, although we have reproduced it faithfully here. It is Høgnar in the manuscript. See Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, p. 43, st. 51.

THE BALLAD OF GESTUR OR THE BALLAD OF ÁSLA (GESTS RÍMA OR ÁSLU RÍMA)

1. Gestur gekk sær niðan við á, – at dansa –
fann upp á, hvar ið harpan lá. Gestur went up by the river, – to dance –
hit upon where the harp lay.¹

Refrain Og væl er mær ansað,
her vil eg á gólvið fram at dansa,
hóast tú vilt mær lív í vanda, væl er mær ansað. *And I am well looked after,
I will go on the floor to dance here,² even if you want to endanger my life,
I am well looked after.*

2. Gestur gjörði sær meiri ómak, harpuna tók hann pá sítt bak. Gestur made a good effort,³ he carried the harp on his back.
3. Gestur gekk seg í ein garð, gisti moy, sum kelling var. Gestur went to a farm, stayed the night at a maiden's, who was a hag.
4. “Gestur, dvølst hjá mær í nátt!
Haki kemur av skógnum brátt.” “Gestur, stay with me tonight!
Haki comes from the forest soon.”
5. Gestur livir við lítið veldi, harpuna setir hann fram at eldi. Gestur had little power over the situation,⁴ he puts the harp by the fire.
6. Gestur dvaldist hjá henni á nátt.
Haki kom av skógnum brátt. Gestur stayed the night with her.
Haki came from the forest shortly afterwards.
7. Kelling talar orðum brátt:
“Vit skulu drepa Gest í nátt.” The hag suddenly speaks these words:
“We shall kill Gestur tonight.”⁵
8. “Eg drepi ikki henda mann, eg veit onga sak við hann.” “I will not kill this man, I have no issue with him.”⁶

1 He finds a harp.

2 This is referring to the singer of the ballad, going on to the floor to dance a Faroese ballad dance.

3 This means that he took trouble or pains over it.

4 Literally “Gestur lives with little power.”

5 These words are spoken to Haki.

6 This is Haki speaking.

9. "Vilt tú ikki drepa hann, Gestur skal vera mín egin mann." "If you won't kill him, then Gestur shall be my own man."⁷ 10. Kelling var í ráðum verst, hon fór upp at drepa Gest. The hag was the worst in her schemes, she went up to kill Gestur.
11. Kelling eigur ein lítlan knív, snarliga skildi hon Gest við lífv. The hag has a small knife, quickly she parted Gestur from his life.
12. Hon breyt upp harpuna eftir hans deyð, hon fann eina moy í skarlak reyð. She broke the harp up after his death, she found a maiden dressed in scarlet red.
13. "Tú skalt liva við lítla pínu, eita Kráka, dóttir mín." "You shall live with little pain,⁸ and be named Kráka, my daughter." 14. "Hóast eg livi við lítla pínu, eg eiti ei Kráka, dóttir tín." "Even if I live with little pain, I'm not named Kráka, your daughter." 15. Ragnar legði skip undir brúgv, so gingu teir í Haka tún. Ragnar⁹ landed the ship by the landing stage,¹⁰
then they went in Haki's courtyard.
16. Ragnar legði skip undir flaka, so ganga teir við breyð at baka. Ragnar landed the ship by a raft, then they went with bread to have it baked.
17. Tað kom ein jomfrú inn og rann, teir stardu á hana, meðan breyðið brann. A maiden came in and ran, they stared at her, while the bread burnt.
18. Hon stoytti yvir hana bryggjukar: "Kráka, tú skalt sitja har!" She poured a brewing vessel over her:
"Kráka, you shall sit there!"

7 She plans to kill him herself.

8 You shall have an easy life.

9 Ása eventually becomes Ragnar's wife in the Old Norse material.

10 This could also mean "bridge," but since the next stanza says they landed by a raft, a landing stage (which is a floating flat structure that acts as a bridge to the land for the loading and offloading of boats) seems reasonable.

19. Hon stoytti av sær bryggjukar: “Fái tann skamm, ið situr har!” She shakes the brewing vessel off herself:
“Shame on the one who sits there!” 20. Kelling sló sína dóttur á grúgvu, tá datt av henni nævurhúgva. The hag struck her daughter down onto the hearth,
then a birch bark hat fell off her.
21. “Hoyr tú kelling, sjáldan blíð, hví slært tú so fagurt vív?” “Listen hag, seldom kind, why do you hit such a beautiful woman?” 22. Hoyr tað, kelling, sjáldan góð, Hví slært tú so fagurt fljóð?” Listen, hag, seldom good, why do you hit such a beautiful woman?”¹¹ 23. “Í forðum var eg vænari fljóð, morð og mans lát av mær stóð.” “In the past I was a more charming woman, murder and manslaughter were caused by me.”¹²
24. Sveinar stiltu stál for stokk, slitu eitt hár úr moyunnar lokk. The footmen stopped the steel before the beam,
they tore out a hair from the maiden’s lock.
25. Sveipa teir tað út í ein klút, teir bóru tað so til skipa út They wrapped it in a cloth, then they carried it to the ship.¹³
26. Ragnar talar orðum snilt:
“Tit hava alla vára fjøðslu spilt.” Ragnar speaks these sensible words:
“You have spoiled all our food.”
27. “Tað kom ein jomfrú inn og rann, vit stardu pá hana, meðan breyðið brann. “A maiden came in and ran,
we stared at her, while the bread burnt.
28. Vit hava sætt so vænt eitt vív, tað var fagrari enn Tóra í Líð. We have seen such a beautiful woman, who is fairer than Tóra í Líð.¹⁴

11 The words for “woman” in stt. 21 and 22 are different, but they are both heiti used for woman.

12 She is saying Kráka got off lightly with her punishment. She has in the past killed Gestur.

13 This would seem to refer to the burnt bread.

14 The name means Tóra on the hillside. Tóra was the first wife of Ragnar, but she is now dead.

29. Vit hava sætt so vænt eitt sprund, We have seen such a beautiful woman, tað var fagrari enn Tóra í Lund.” who is fairer than Tóra í Lund.”¹⁵ 30. “Sveinar, haldið tit meg fyri háð, “Footmen, if you are mocking me, tit skulu allir á gálgan gá! you shall all go to the gallows!
31. Sveinar, halda tit meg fyri spott, Footmen, if you are ridiculing me, tit skulu allir á gálgan brátt!” you will soon be at the gallows!” 32. Sveinar stiltu stál for stokk, The footmen stopped the steel teir vístu eitt hár úr moynnar lokk. before the beam, they showed a hair from the maiden’s lock.
33. “Farið heim og sigið henni frá: “Go home and tell her: Ragnar kongur vil hana sjá!” King Ragnar wants to see her!”
34. Teir fóru heim og søgdu henni frá: They went home and told her: “Ragnar kongur vil teg sjá.” “King Ragnar wants to see you.”
35. Ás[]a gár í grøna líð, Ás[]a walks on the green hillside, kallar við sær lítin hýð. calls a little dog to her.¹⁶
36. Ás[]a gár í grønan lund, Ás[]a walks in the green grove, kallar við sær lítin hund. calls a little dog to her.
37. Ás[]a gár á kirkjubakka, Ás[]a walks on the church bank,¹⁷ – at dansa – – to dance – kallar við sær lítin rakka. calls to her a little young dog.

Refrain Og væl er mær ansað,
her vil eg á gólvið fram at dansa,
hóast tú vilt mær lív í vanda,
væl er mær ansað.

*And I am well looked after,
I will go on the floor to dance here,¹⁸
even if you want to endanger my life,
I am well looked after.*

15 The name means Tóra in the grove.

16 A hýð is a dog. See Fróðskaparsetur Føroya, Orðkort, s.v. “Hyð.”

17 This is “bank” as in “hill.”

18 This is referring to the singer of the ballad, going on to the floor to dance a Faroese ballad dance.

THE BALLAD OF NORNAGESTUR (NORNAGESTS RÍMA)

1. Eitt er frøðið um Nornagest, – tú tarvt einki ráð geva í vanda – tílkum góðum gekk tað best.
– Hvør tann svein geri so.
There is a ballad¹ about Nornagestur, – you don't need to give advice when you're in peril –
such a good man, it went the best way.
– Every man does it like that.
2. Oksar tólv vóru leiddir á torg, og so fram á fríðu borg.
Twelve oxen were led to the market, and then onwards to a beautiful castle.
3. Kongurin aktar at høgga teim, tílkum góðum gekk tað við gleim.
The king intends to kill them, such a good kill, it happened with merriment.²
4. Kongurin hjó so mikið høg,gg, eitt bragdarbrá við benjardøgg.
The king landed such a great blow, a heroic draw of the sword with blood.³ 5. Allir dattu deyðir niður, øksin stóð í stokki við.
All fell down dead,
the axe stood in the chopping block.
6. Allir lovaðu hilmar høg,gg, og blóðið dreiv um benjardøgg.
Everyone praised the prince's blow, and the blood flowed over blood.⁴
7. Kongurin krevur kallin blítt: “Hví lovar tú ikki høggið mítt?”
The king demands of the old man in a friendly way:
“Why do you not praise my blow?”
8. “Yvrið, harri, var høggið títt, í forðum sá eg vænari slíkt.” “Your blow was an angry one, sir, in the past I have seen more graceful blows than that.”
9. “Kannst tú siga frá Sjúrdða svein, hann var seg frægur av fornum ein?”
“Can you tell the story of Sjúrdður svein, he was a famous man of the past?”

1 Frøðið is the subject matter of a poem or ballad.

2 Gleimur is a poetic word used in ballads, meaning gaiety, cheerful, merry.

3 This is a kenning used in ballads. Ben is a word used in ballads meaning a fatal wound, while døgg means “dew,” “dew of the wound,” together meaning “blood.”

4 The two words for “blood” are different here. The first is literally “blood” while the second is the same kenning used for blood in st. 4.

10. "Tað kann eg siga Sjúrða frá, tílfkan ongan við eygum sá. "I can tell the story of Sjúrður, no one has seen such a man.
11. Tá skalv bæði leyv og lundur, ormin hogg hann í miðjum sundur. Both leaf and grove shook, when he chopped the dragon apart through the middle.
12. Høgni var ein heiðursmann, ljótan av lit so kendi eg hann. Høgni was an honourable man, I knew him to be ugly in complexion.⁵
13. Høgni var ein heiðursmann, døkkkan av liti kendi eg hann. Høgni was an honourable man,
I knew him to be dark in complexion.
14. Gunnar var so reystur og ríkur, fróður og blíður og Grimhild líkur. Gunnar was so strong and powerful, wise and kind and like Grimhild.
15. Gamal og gráur og Grimhild líkur, seint man føðast annar slíkur. Old and grey and like Grimhild, it will be a long time before another like him is born.
16. Riðu teir um díkið heim, Gunnar og Høgni og Sjúrður svein. They rode home around the marsh, Gunnar and Høgni and Sjúrður svein.
17. Gunnars hestur sprakk um fyrst, gjørði so Gunnari góða list. Gunnar's horse jumped over first, Gunnar did such a well-calculated jump.
18. Høgna hestur sprakk um tá, Grani fastur í feni lá. Then Høgni's horse jumped,
Grani lay stuck in the fen.
19. Ofta havi eg inn um díkið trott bæði dag og døkkka nátt. I have often trodden in the marsh both in the daytime and in the dark night.
20. Allir stóðu úr sððlum teir, Gunnar og Høgni og Sjúrður svein. All dismounted from their saddles, Gunnar and Høgni and Sjúrður svein.

⁵ Being dark and ugly (see the following stanza, st. 13) is used to visually convey someone being evil.

21. Allir toga á dýran hest, Sjúrður togar á teymar mest. All are pulling on their precious horses, Sjúrður is pulling on the reins the most.
22. “Gestur, ger mær viljan ein, tú fá mín góða gangara rein!” “Gestur, do one thing for me, you get my good steed clean!” 23. Riðu so fram at eini á, eingin kundi til manna sjá. They then rode by a river, no one could see anyone else.
24. Eg tváaði hans bróst og bringugrein, hans lær og legg og longu bein. I washed his chest and sternum, his thighs and lower legs and long legs.
25. Góðan gangara gjörði eg rein, síðan hevði Sjúrður svein. I made the good steed clean, afterwards Sjúrður svein took me as his squire.
26. Riðu so fram á Fávnis ból, har skein gull, sum geisar av sól. They rode to Fávniir’s lair, gold shone there like rays of the sun.
27. Eitt var hár í hala á hest, tað var favn og feti mest. There was a hair in the tail of the horse, that was a fathom and a foot in size.⁶ 28. Tað var favn og feti sítt og glógvaði rætt sum silvur hvítt. It was a fathom and a foot long and sparkled just as white silver.
29. Kongurinn gav honum skaft og skeið, og sjálvur segði hann kalli leið. The king gave him shaft⁷ and ship, and he himself told the man the way.
30. Frakkaland við váknum vítt tað er longd úr lívið mítt. Scouting land widely with weaponry,⁸ that is the extent of my life.

⁶ This indicates the immense size of the horse.

⁷ The king gave him weapons.

⁸ This line is uncertain. In the manuscript, what is Frakkaland in CCF is actually Frökka land in the manuscript. Matras, J. H. Schrøters optegnelser, p. 58, st. 15. Here we follow Lyngbye’s suggestion that Frökka is the same as frætta, meaning to scout.

ÍSMAL THE BRAVE HERO (ÍSMAL FRÆGA KEMPA)

1. Mangar bróta á havinum brattar og bráðar bylgjur, tað kom Ísmali fyrst í hug Hermund sín at spyrja.
- Many steep and high waves break on the sea,
the first thing that occurred to Ísmal was to ask his Hermundur.¹

*Refrain Grani bar gullið av heiði,
brá hann sínum brandi av reiði,
Sjúrður vann av orminum,
og Grani bar gullið av heiði.*

*Grani carried the gold from the heath,
he brandished his blade in a fury,
Sjúrður defeated the dragon,
Grani carried the gold from the heath.*

2. Tað kom Ísmali fyrst í hug
Hermund sín at spyrja:
“Vit skulu ríða í kongins garð Hjálpreks dóttur at biðja.”
- The first thing that occurred to Ísmal
was to ask his Hermundur: “We shall ride to the king’s court to ask for Hjálprek’s daughter.”²

3. Úti í miðjum grasgarði
akslar hann sítt skinn,
og so búgvín gongur hann
í høggar hallir inn.
- In the middle of the garden
he throws his cloak on,
and clothed like that he walks into the high halls.

4. Og so búgvín gongur hann
í høggar hallir inn,
sum Hjálprek kongur at borði sat við manna hundrað fimm.
- And clothed like that he walks
into the high halls,
where King Hjálprek sat at the table with five hundred men.

5. Ísmal stendur á hallargólvi
við silkikneptari húgvu, kinnin er reyð sum hummarklógv og eygað blátt sum í dúgvu.
- Ísmal stands on the floor of the hall with a silk-buttoned hat, his cheek is as red as a lobster claw and his eye as blue as a dove’s.

6. Ísmal stendur á hallargólvi,
ber fram kvøðu sína: “Sit heil, reystur kongurin, tú gev mær dóttur tína!”
- Ísmal stands on the floor of the hall,
he presents his offer of marriage: “Sit hale,³ bold king, give me your daughter!”

7. Leingi sat hann kongurin og hugsaði um tað ráð, hvussu hann skuldi Ísmali
eitt hánligt andsvar fá.
- The king sat for a long time thinking about the proposal, how he should give Ísmal
a mocking reply.

1 Hermundur seems to be the name of his squire or one of his trusted men.

2 To ask for her in marriage.

3 This means healthy and unharmed.

8. “Jomfrúgvín eigur ein raskan bróður,
eitur Sjúrdur frægi, stóð hann tær til hægri hand, hann tóktist vera tín maki.”
- “The maiden has a brave brother called the valiant Sjúrdur, if he stood by your right handside, he would seem your equal.”⁴
9. Tað var Svanhild sólarljóma, inn í hallina gekk,
tað fyrsta hon Ísmal við eygum sá, hon yndi til hann fekk.
- It was Svanhild sólarljómi,⁵ she walked into the hall, when she first laid eyes on Ísmal, she fell in love with him.
10. Leingi sat hann kongurinn og hugsaði har uppá,
hvussu hann skuldi Ísmali
eitt blíðligt andsvar fá.
- The king sat for a long time thinking on the issue,
how he should give Ísmal
a friendly answer.
11. Tá svaraði Hjalprek kongur
alt foruttan ekka:
“Tær gevi eg nú mína dóttur og hartil brúðleypsdrékka.”
- Then King Hjalprek answered without worry: “Now I give my daughter to you and the wedding feast⁶ as well.” 12. Ísmal stendur á hallargólvi
gyrði seg og vendi, festi Svanhildu sólarljóma, Hjalprek kongur sendi.
- Ísmal stands on the floor of the hall girded⁷ himself and turned,
he was betrothed to Svanhild sólarljómi,⁸ King Hjalprek sent for him.
13. Ísmal stendur á hallargólvi,
á flestøllum veit hann skil: “Hvør skal bjóða Sjúrða mína samkoming til?”
- Ísmal stands on the floor of the hall,
he is cunning in most things:
“Who shall invite Sjúrdur to my wedding gathering?”⁹

4 This likely indicate Sjúrdur is just a youth, but already the equal of Ísmal.

5 Her byname means “sunshine.”

6 This literally means “wedding drink” and is probably referring to the alcohol to toast the wedding with.

7 This could be, for example, with a sword, or he has dressed himself up.

8 The idea is that he is betrothed to Svanhild then and there, standing in the hall.

9 Samkoming is a gathering of people but also is used specifically to refer to a wedding in the sense of a “coming together” of a couple.

14. Tí svaraði Hjalprek kongur, tann hin ríki alvur: “Eg veit einki annað ráð, enn tær bjóðið honum sjálvur.”
- To that King Hjalprek answered, that mighty man:¹⁰
“I know of no other possibility, than you invite him yourself.” 15. Ísmai leyp á góðan gangara, burtur á skógvin reið,
møtti honum Sjúrdur
Sigmundarson
mitt á sínari leið.
- Ísmai leapt onto a good horse, rode away to the forest,
he met Sjúrdur Sigmundarson
in the middle of his path.
16. Møtti honum Sjúrdur
Sigmundarson
mitt á sínari leið,
tað er mær av sonnum sagt,
hann var ikki ‘brúnabaj.’
- He met Sjúrdur Sigmundarson
in the middle of his path,
it is truthfully told to me,
that he didn’t look happy.¹¹ 17. Ísmai stendur á grønum vølli,
á flestøllum veit hann skil: “Tær bjóði eg nú, Sjúrdur, mína samkoming til.”
- Ísmai stands on a green field, in most things he is cunning: “Now I invite you, Sjúrdur, to my wedding gathering.”
18. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
hann situr á baldum hesti: “Hvaðan av londum er tann frúgv, ið tær havið, Ísmai, fest?”
- Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered,
he sits on a bold horse:
“What kingdom is that lady from, that you, Ísmai, are betrothed to?” 19. “Hjalprek kongur, hennara faðir, frúgv Hjördis hennara móðir,
tað er mær av sonnum sagt,
at tær eruð jomfrúgvans bróðir.”
- “King Hjalprekur is her father, lady Hjördis is her mother,
it is truthfully told to me, that you’re the maiden’s brother.” 20. “Hevur tú mína systur fest og eg ikki til tess frætt, eg skal teg við lurkum lemja, tú bíður ei annan rætt.”
- “If you’ve been betrothed to my sister without me having been told about it, I shall beat you with clubs, you can’t expect anything else.”

10 An alvur is a mighty, powerful man.

11 Lyngbye glosses brúnabaj as “mild at see til” (gentle to look at). Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 106n16. That Sjúrdur doesn’t look happy when he encounters Ísmai implies that Sjúrdur already knows what has happened and what will happen, i.e., that he knows the future.

21. “Hóað eg havi tína systur fest og tú ikki til tess frætt, áðrenn tú meg við lurkum lemur,
eg bjóði tær annan rætt.
- “Though I have been betrothed to your sister and you haven’t been told, before you beat me with clubs,
I will offer you another option.
22. Eg havi tína systur fest, tó eg teg ei kendi,
áðrenn tú meg við lurkum lemur,
sveittast tær um enni.”
- I have been betrothed to your sister, though I didn’t know you, before you’ve beaten me with clubs, you will be sweating on your forehead.” 23. “Hevur tú mína systur fest, høvísk yvir allar kvinnur, hoyr tú, Ísmal, fræga kempa, tú skalt mær treytir vinna.”
- “If you have been betrothed to my sister, more courteous than all other women,
hear this Ísmal, brave hero, you have to complete some hard tasks¹² for me.”
24. Svaraði Ísmal, fræga kempa, vaksin yvir allar seggjar: “Hvat eitur tann fyrsta treyt, ið tær skuluð um meg leggja?”
- Ísmal the brave hero answered, better than all other warriors: “What is the first task¹³ that you will set for me?” 25. “Fram út í tann grøna skógv har liggja ormar seks,
allar skalt tú deyðar hava,
tú stígur á brúðarbekk.
- “Out in the green forest there are six dragons,
you shall kill all of them, before you sit in the wedding seat.¹⁴ 26. Fram út í tann grøna skógv har liggja ormar tólv,
allar skalt tú deyðar hava,
tú stígur á brúðargólv.”
- In the green forest
there are twelve dragons,
you shall kill all of them, before you stand on the wedding floor.”¹⁵ 27. “Fram út í tann grøna skógv
har liggja ormar tveir, sig mær, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, hvussu langir eru teir?”
- “In the green forest,
there are two dragons,
tell me, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, how long are they?”

12 This is in the sense of difficult trials.

13 In CCF, for this line there is no opening quotation mark and the first letter of Hvat is in lowercase.

14 This means before he gets married.

15 Literally “stand on the bridal floor.”

28. "Ein er átjan alin langur, annar tríggar og tjúgu, øll mín hirð er vitnisfær, eg sigi tær sanna sögu."
- "One is eighteen ells long,
the second is twenty three,
all of my retinue can be witnesses to this,
I'm telling you a true story." 29. "Er hann átjan alin langur, annar tríggar ella tvá, eri eg sonur Samsons sterka, ræðist eg ekki tá."
- "If it's eighteen ells long, and the second is three or two,
if I'm the son of Samson the strong, then I will not fear anything." 30. Allar vá hann ormarnar, tað tókti honum ongan vanda, Finna spýði eitur á hann, hann náddi ekki haðan at ganga.
- He slew all the dragons, it didn't seem difficult to him, Finna¹⁶ breathed poison on him, he didn't manage to walk away from there.
31. Tað var Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, hann heim í garðin fór,
úti er Svanhild sólarljóma, hon fyri honum stóð.
- It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
he went home to the court, Svanhild sólarljómi is outside,
she stands before him.
32. Sjúrdur gekk í borgina, og gott er í honum alvið, so settist hann í hásetið, so borgin øll hon skalv.
- Sjúrdur went into the castle, and there is great strength in him, then he sat himself in the high seat, so that the whole castle shook.
33. "Plaga so, faðir, hævískir menn sína dóttur so geva,
eg vildi títt hálsbein sundur í sjeu varð sligið við mínum neva."
- "Is it usual father, for courteous men to give away their daughter like that, I would that your neck bone was broken into seven pieces by my fist." 34. Fram kom Svanhild sólarljóma, hævísk yvir allar kvinnur:
"Hevur tú, Sjúrdur, lagt tað ráð, Ísmali treytir at vinna?"
- Svanhild sólarljómi came forward,
more courteous than all other women:
"Have you devised such a plot, Sjúrdur, that Ísmal should perform deeds for you?" 35. "Gakk tú burtur frá mínum eygum, eg vil teg ekki hoyra, sámir tað ei mín búgvín brand at rjóða í kvinnudroyra!"
- "Get out of my sight,
I don't want to listen to you, it isn't seemly for my readied sword to be reddened by women's blood!"¹⁷

¹⁶ Finna (presumably the same as Finnur) is the name of one of the dragons.

¹⁷ Droyri is a word used in ballads for blood.

36. Tað var Svanhild sólarljóma, tekur so høgt at gráta, eftir spurdi Sjúrdur, í hví hon mundi so láta. It was Svanhild sólarljóma, she begins to cry so loudly, Sjúrdur asked,
why she made such noise.
37. “Gakk tú burtur frá mínum eygum, grát ikki longur á sinni, enn var maður mentur
fyri moyggj,
*ið ei var maður minni!” “Get out of my sight, don’t cry any longer,
still the man was capable for the sake of the maiden,
he was not a lesser man than I!”¹⁸ 38. Sjúrdur leyp á góða gangara, hann *var dreingja maki,
so ríður hann á skógvar burtur fyri systur sínar sakir. Sjúrdur leapt on his good horse, he was the heroes’ equal, then he rides off to the forest for his sister’s sake.
39. Ísmal liggur á grønum vølli, staddur í ormavanda,
fegin er hann, at hann hoyrir
Grana hóvar ganga. Ísmal lies on a green field, he is in danger from the dragons,
he is happy when he hears
the sound of Grani’s hooves.
40. Ísmal liggur á grønum vølli, staddur í ormablóði,
fegin er hann, at hann hoyrir
Grana bresta hóvum. Ísmal lies on a green field, lying in dragon’s blood,
he is happy when he hears Grani beating his hooves.
41. Tekur hann hann í saðilin upp og sára um hann kvíðar, leitar nú í tasku síni smyrsl á hann at ríða. He takes him up onto the saddle dreading his wounds, he searches in his bag
for ointment to rub him with.
42. Tekur hann hann í saðilin upp, førir hann heim til hallar: “Tak við, Svanhild sólarljóma, grøð tann garpin snjalla!” He takes him up onto the saddle, takes him home to the hall: “Take him, Svanhild sólarljómi, heal the bold hero!”

18 Sjúrdur is saying that Ísmal was worthy of the maiden and was almost as strong as he is.

43. Hon grøddi hann í dagar, hon grøddi hann í tvá,
fyrsta dag í fjórðu viku
fór hann í brynju blá.
- She healed him for days,
she healed him for two,
on the first day of the fourth week
he put on his blue armour.
44. Fyrsta dag í fjórðu viku fór hann í brynju nýggja, leiddi hon hann í hallina inn, so vænur var garpi at síggja.
- On the first day of the fourth week
he put on his new armour, she led him into the hall, the hero was so handsome to look at.
45. Lótu tá til brúðleyps laða, tá var ei at tvørra,
átjan borgum boðið var,
tólv hundrað menn úr hvørji.
- Then they had the wedding prepared,
then nothing could be in short supply, eighteen castles were invited,
twelve hundred men from each.
46. Lótu tá til brúðleyps laða, næst var komið til sams,
átjan borgum boðið var,
og har var kongur av Frans.
- Then they had the wedding prepared,
everything had almost come together,
eighteen castles were invited,
and there was the king of France.¹⁹ 47. Ikki fattaðist Ísmali brúðarmannin ein,
við høggru hand gekk Hjalprek kongur
og vinstru Gunnar svein.
- Ísmal wasn't lacking
in bridesmen,
on his right handside walked King Hjalpek and on his left the young Gunnar.
48. Ikki fattaðist Svanhildu brúðarkonur prúðar, við høggru hand gekk Gunnhild Buðla
og vinstru Grimhild Júka.
- Svanhild wasn't lacking in beautiful bridesmaids,
on her right hand walked Buðli's Gunnhild and on her left Júki's Grimhild.
49. Ikki fattaðist Svanhildu brúðarmoyggjar prúðar, við høggru hand gekk Brynhild Buðla
og vinstru Guðrun Júka.
- Svanhild wasn't lacking in
beautiful bridesmaids,
on her right hand side walked Buðli's
and on her left Júki's Guðrun.

19 Frans here for Frakland. Lyngbye notes this is for the sake of the rhyme. Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 118n46.

50. Har var maður, ið harpu slerdi, nevndur Ørvaroddur, Hjálmar, kappi frægi, við Sjúrdða moyggjar studdi. There was a man, who played the harp, named Ørvaroddur,²⁰ Hjálmar,²¹ the bold hero, supported Sjúrdur's maidens.²² 51. Tríati vóru silvursteyp og annaðslíkt av skálum, tað leyp av í kongins høll, tá ið alt var sett í máli. There were thirty silver goblets, and other bowls like them, there was an over abundance in the king's hall,
when all the goods had been put in place.
52. Tríati silvurføt, og nýsmídd vóru øll,
Sjúrdur stendur á hallargólvi, hann sigur frá gørpum snjøllum. Thirty dishes of silver, and all were newly forged, Sjúrdur stands on the hall floor, he tells of bold heroes.
53. So stardi hann Sjúrdur á Brynhildar mál, hann breyt yvir borðinum forgylta mjaðarskál. Sjúrdur then stared at Brynhild's conversation, he broke over the table
a gilded mead cup.
54. Drukkið varð teirra brúdleypið, hirðin var so fegin,
sum tann fuglur, á viði situr, er um tann ljósa dag. Their wedding was celebrated, the retinue was as happy as the bird that sits in a tree is at the light of day.²³ 55. Tríati vóru kerti tendrað, og fjøruti vóru logar, fylgdu teirri ríku frúgv fyrstu nátt at sova. Thirty candles were lit, and there were forty flames,²⁴ they escorted the mighty lady to sleep on the first night.

20 This is the Old Norse character Ørvar Oddr, the protagonist of the Icelandic Ørvar Odds saga, who also appears, for example, in the ballad Arngríms synir (CCF 16).

21 This is the Old Norse character Hjálmar, who appears in both the Icelandic Ørvar Odds saga and Hervarar saga, and who also appears for example in the ballad Arngríms synir (CCF 16).

22 It seems Hjálmar and Sjúrdur escorted the bride's party.

23 This seems to refer to the dawn chorus.

24 This likely means forty torches.

56. Tríati vóru kerti tendrað og hartil vaksljós, Hjalprek kongur og hirðin øll tey fylgdu í svøvnhús.
- Thirty candles were lit and wax candles as well, King Hjalprek and the whole retinue they escorted them to the sleeping house.
57. Har varð urgan í garðin troðin, harpur og mikil meingi, Hjalprek kongur og hirðin øll tey fylgdu teim til seingir.
- The organ was played in the garden,
harps and a large crowd,
King Hjalprek and the whole retinue
they escorted them to bed.
58. Drukkið varð teirra brúdleypið, og kátt var teirra lív, bæði gingu í eina song, Ísmal og hans vív.
- Their wedding was celebrated and they lived happily together, both went into one bed,
Ísmal and his wife.
59. Drukkið varð teirra brúdleypið bæði væl og leingi, kom so mangur ein hovmann til sum fjøður í fuglaveingjum.
- Their wedding was celebrated both well and lengthily, so many a courtier came there as there are feathers in birds' wings.
60. Drukkið varð teirra brúdleypið, og so er komið til mín, síðan fór hvør, sum biðin var, haðan heim til sín.
- Their wedding was celebrated,
so it has been told to me,²⁵ then each that was invited went from there to their own home.
61. Nú skal lata ljóði av,
eg kvøði ikki longur á sinni,
nú skal taka upp annan tátt
og ítari leggja í minni.
- Now I shall end my song,
I sing no longer at present,
now to begin the second part of the ballad
and continue to remember it.

*Refrain Grani bar gullið av heiði,
brá hann sínum brandi av reiði,
Sjúrdur vann av orminum,
og Grani bar gullið av heiði.*

*Grani carried the gold from the heath,
he brandished his blade in a fury,
Sjúrdur defeated the dragon,
Grani carried the gold from the heath.*

25 Literally “so has it come to me.”

SJÚRÐUR AND THE DWARF MAIDEN OR DWARF MAIDEN I (SJÚRÐUR OG DVØRGAMOY OR DVØRGAMOY I)

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. Eg veit eina rímuna, inní hefur lígið leingi: Hjalprekur fyri ríki ræður,
reystar hefur hann dreingir. | I know of a ballad, that has lain inside me for a long time: ¹ Hjalprekur rules a kingdom,
he has such bold heroes. |
| 2. Raskar hefur hann dreingirnar og hartil mangar sveinar,
ein ber yvir allar teir,
hann glógvar í gulli reina. | He has such bold heroes, and many footmen as well, ²
one is above them all,
he shines in pure gold. ³ |
| 3. Mangar hefur hann sveinar, alir teir upp við gavni,
ein ber yvir allar teir,
Sjúrður nevndur á navni. | He has many heroes, entertains them with pleasure,
one is above them all,
Sjúrður is his name. |
| 4. Hoyrt havi [eg] av gamal tíð, at *arin er eitt fok,
nú skal ríma um Sjúrð hin unga,
hansara fyrsta tok. | I have heard it from olden times, that the arrow is as quick as lightning, ⁴ now to compose verses about Sjúrður the young,
about his first expedition. ⁵ |
| 5. Snarlíga kann *arin flúgva eina langa leið,
nú skal kvøða um Sjúrð hin unga, tá hann fyrst út reið. | The arrow can fly quickly for a long way,
now to sing ⁶ about Sjúrður the young,
when he rode out the first time. |

1 It does not say “me” in the original, but we are assuming that this means that the “rhyme” has lain inside the singer for a long time, waiting for an opportunity to be performed.

2 Here we have translated sveinar as footmen to distinguish them from the men, dreingir, mentioned in the line above, which we have translated as heroes. However, sveinar can also mean heroes, so it is not entirely clear here what the two terms are referring to. However, the main point is that the king has lots of men. In st. 3, for example, we have translated sveinar as heroes.

3 We understand him shining in gold to mean that his clothes and equipment were gold, i.e., luxurious.

4 We have understood ar as ör, meaning arrow. Hammershaimb has örnin (eagle) and notes that others sing haran (the hare). Hammershaimb, Sjúrðar Kvæði, 80 st. 1.

5 We have understood tok here as the Danish word togt, meaning expedition or raid, like that the Vikings went on.

6 Kvøða implies dancing and chanting the ballad.

6. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin skín so víða,
Sjúrður klæðist for síni song,
hann býr seg út at ríða.
Early in the morning,
the sun shone so widely,
Sjúrður dresses himself in front of his bed,
he readies himself to ride.
7. Út varð loystur gangarin undir hallarvegg, prýddur var hann við skarlak niður á hóvarskegg.
The horse was untied
under the wall of the hall, it was adorned with scarlet cloth down to the fetlocks.
8. Út varð loystur gangarin,
ið Sjúrður skuldi á ríða, hann var prýddur við skarlak niður á miðal síðu.
The horse was untied,
that Sjúrður would ride on,
it was adorned with scarlet cloth
down to the middle of its side.
9. Sjúrður klæðist for síni [song],
letst í brynju nýggja:
“Nú lystir meg á skógvin fram undurverk at síggja.”
Sjúrður dresses himself in front of his bed,
puts on his new armour:
“Now I want to go into the forest to see marvels.”⁷
10. Sjúrður klæðist for síni song, hann fekk so mikið í huga: “Nú lystir meg á skógvin fram undurverk at skoða.”
Sjúrður dresses himself in front of his bed,
he wanted to so much:⁸
“Now I want to go into the forest to see marvels.”⁹ 11. Sjúrður reið á skógvin fram bæði av illsku [og] bræði, hvørki kundi fyri hann koma kristið ella heiðið.
Sjúrður rode into the forest
both in anger and in a temper, neither Christians nor heathens could stand in his way.¹⁰ 12. Sjúrður reið á skógvin fram fult í dagar tríggjar, einki ting tað kundi hann hvørki hoyra ei síggja.
Sjúrður rode in the forest for three full days, he could neither
see nor hear anything.
13. So reið hann tann fjórða dag, tóktist vera í trota,
tá ið dagur at kvøldi kom, sá hann ein stóran flota.
Then he rode on the fourth day, he was completely worn out, when the day came to evening, he saw a great fleet.

7 The closing quotation mark on this line is missing in CCF.

8 This could also be “he had so much on his mind.”

9 The verb for “see” is different in stt. 9 and 10 (síggja and skoða).

10 The final two lines of the stanzas are the other way round in the Faroese but reversed here to preserve meaning in the translation.

14. Tað var Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, stillar síni ferð,
hann sær har í hasum flota gull við búgvíð svørð. It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, he stops his journey,
there he sees in that fleet gold by readied sword.
15. Sjúrdur stillar síni ferð ei í góðan tíma,
hann sær har [í] hasum flota teirra skjöldar skína. Sjúrdur stops his journey not at a good time,¹¹ there in that fleet he sees that their shields shine.
16. Tað er Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, tekur til sítt svørð: “Nú skal ríða longur fram at vita, hvøssu fer.” It is Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, he grabs his sword:
“Now I’ll ride further ahead to see how it goes.” 17. Sjúrdur mundi til teir fara, tað var ei til dans,
hann sær sita fyri sær ein heilan dvørgakrans. Sjúrdur would go to them, it was not to dance,¹²
he sees sitting in front of him a whole ring of dwarves.
18. Hyggur hann upp á dvørgarnar, teir hyggja upp á hann, hvørgin partur talaði, tóktist teim einki stand. He looks up at the dwarves, they look up at him,
neither party spoke,
it seemed to them to be no disturbance.
19. Svaraði ein av dvørgunum, hann bar ikki kinnar bleikar: “Hvat eru tíni ørindi?
Ert tú komin at leika?” One of the dwarves responded,
he didn’t have pale cheeks:
“What brings you here?
Have you come to play?” 20. Svaraði annar av dvørgunum, hann bar ikki kinnar bleikar: “Ert tú komin at stríðast her, ella ert tú komin at leika?” One of the dwarves responded,
he didn’t have pale cheeks:
“Have you come to fight here, or have you come to play?” 21. Sjúrdur situr á sínum hesti, ongan veg kann fara,
enntá tegir Sjúrdur til, tordi ei aftur at svara. Sjúrdur sits on his horse, can’t go anywhere,
even so Sjúrdur is silent, he didn’t dare to answer back.

11 Presumably this is not a good time to stop his journey because he is completely exhausted.

12 This is a meta reflection on the ballad being sung at this time; the people singing the ballad are in a ring dancing, while Sjúrdur sees a circle of dwarves and will not be dancing with them.

22. Hundrað vóru dvørgarnir, væl, tað var ikki fleiri, allir upp á Sjúrðin sóu bæði av illsku og reiði.
23. Hugsaði Sjúrður Sigmundarson: “Eg skal ikki hjartað selja, gerið, hvat tykkum sýnist best, tit skulu korini velja.” 24. Upp steig ein av dvørgunum, hveðs hann sítt spjót,
ógvuligur annar tá,
hann snúðist honum imót.
25. Høggini vanka mong og tung, syngur á dvørgabrynju,
hann sær hvørki himmal ei jørð,
tey yvir honum dynja.
26. Høggini vanka mong og tung, summir falla á grúgvu,
hann sær hvørki himmal ei jørð,
tey yvir honum flúgva.
27. Har kom ein av dvørgunum fast av miklum móði,
hann hevði upp sína høggu hond,
Sjúrða á nasar sló.
28. Tá fekk Sjúrður av dvørgum høggu, tann hin menskur mann, blóðið undan brynjuni
niður á saðil rann.
- There were a hundred dwarves, it was good that there weren't more, all looked up at Sjúrður
both in anger and in a temper.
- Sjúrður Sigmundarson thought: “I shall not part with the heart,¹³ do what seems best for you, you shall choose the terms.”¹⁴
- One of the dwarves stepped up, he sharpens his spear,
then another terrible-looking dwarf¹⁵ turned towards him.
- The blows fly, many and heavy,
they sing on the dwarven armour,
he sees neither heaven nor earth,
they thunder above him.¹⁶
- The blows fly, many and heavy,
some fall on his face,
he sees neither heaven nor earth,
they fly above him.¹⁷
- There came one of the dwarves, though in a mighty rage, he had his right hand raised,
he hit Sjúrður on the nose.
- Then Sjúrður received a blow from the dwarves,
that bold man,
the blood ran down the armour down onto the saddle.

13 The meaning of this line is unclear. He seems to be saying he does not want to be killed here.

14 The “you” here is in the plural.

15 It says “he” in the Faroese, but we have added “dwarf” for clarity.

16 The “they” here refers to the blows.

17 Again, the “they” here refers to the blows.

29. Yvrið dregur at Sjúrdi, søgur ganga frá,
dregur út sítt búgvið svørð og tað í loftið brá.
- Sjúrdur becomes incensed, tales are told of it,
he draws his readied sword and brandishes it in the air.
30. Ógvuliga Sjúrdur hogg, tað syngur á gyltum ringi: “Hetta er tað fyrsta sár, eg havi á skógnum fingið.”
- Sjúrdur hews mightily, it sings on golden rings:¹⁸
“This is the first wound, I’ve received in the forest.”
31. Sjúrdur brá sín bitra brand, tað mundi ongan vara,
sleri so til dvørgin tann, hann feldi hann niður til jarðar.
- Sjúrdur brandishes his sharp sword, no one would have guessed it,¹⁹ then he dealt a blow to that dwarf, he felled him to the ground.
32. Har kom fram ein annar dvørgur, Sjúrdi mundi hann siga: “Slá tú ongan fleiri dvørg, hann var ei av várum liði!
- There appeared a second dwarf,
he said to Sjúrdur:²⁰ “Don’t you hit any more dwarves, he wasn’t in our band!²¹ 33. Hoyr tað, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
eg sigi tær satt ífrá:
slært tú niður ein annan dvørg,
tú kemur har ikki frá.”
- Listen, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, I’m telling you truthfully:
if you knock down another dwarf, you won’t leave this place.” 34. Burtur hvurvu dvørgarnir, helst fyri uttan vanda, síðan mátti Sjúrdur í kolmyrkri ganga.
- The dwarves disappeared, probably without danger, after that Sjúrdur
had to walk in pitchblack darkness.
35. So reið Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, frystir hans saðilgjørð, rímfrost var tá yvir fallið heidna manna jørð.
- Then Sjúrdur Sigmundarson rode, his girth froze,²²
then hoarfrost had fallen over heathen ground.

18 This could be rings of a byrnie, but it could also be arm rings on the dwarf.

19 Vara means to expect or to guess. They are making a joke saying no one would have expected Sjúrdur to do this—this was, of course, entirely expected.

20 This line is in the conditional “he would have said to Sjúrdur:”

21 This is in the sense of “band of dwarves” and also has connotations of army or troop.

22 This is referring to the girth on his saddle.

36. Sjúrdur ríður til og frá, ongan veg kann finna, dvørgamoyggjin til hann kom, hin vitra og hin svinna.
- Sjúrdur rides to and fro,
he can't find his way,
the dwarf maiden came to him,
the wise and sensible one.
37. Har kom fagra dvørgamoyggjin, skín sum sól á sjó,
hon mundi vera í gulli rend, perlur á jørðina dró.
- The fair dwarf maiden came there, she shone like the sun on the sea, her clothes were bordered with gold,²³ she drew pearls on the ground after her.²⁴ 38. Svaraði hin ungi Sjúrdur, tungu ber hann so snjalla: “Hoyr tað, yndig dvørgamoyggjin, flyt meg heim til halla!”
- The young Sjúrdur asked,
he spoke so eloquently: “Listen, lovely dwarf maiden, take me home to the hall!” 39. Tað var yndig dvørgamoyggjin, fylgdi honum so væl av tí høgá fjallinum
í ein djúpan dal.
- It was the lovely dwarf maiden, she led him so carefully off the high mountain into a deep valley.
40. Fylgdi hon honum í dalin niður fram við eini á,
borgir sóu tey undan koma,
á pílarum stá.
- She accompanied him down into the valley along a river,
they saw castles come into view,
that stood on pillars.
41. Tá svaraði Sjúrdur
av so tungari sorg:
“Hoyr tú, yndig dvørgamoyggjin, hvør býr her í borg?”
- Then Sjúrdur asked grief-stricken:²⁵
“Listen, lovely dwarf maiden, who lives here in the castle?” 42. Svaraði yndig dvørgamoyggjin, øll í gulli skín:
“Hann býr her í hesi borg, sæli faðir mín.
- The lovely dwarf maiden answered,
shining with gold:
“He who lives here in this castle, is my dear father.
43. Hoyr tað, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, tak teg fullvæl vara,
hvat mín faðir til tín sigur, tú skalt ei aftur svara.
- Listen, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
be very cautious,
you shall not respond to what my father says to you.²⁶

23 This line is actually conditional, and it says literally “she was probably bordered with gold.” This must be referring to her clothes.

24 We have added “after her” to make the meaning clear. This must be referring to some kind of train.

25 Sjúrdur probably wanted to be led back to his own hall.

26 The two final lines of the stanza are the other way round in the Faroese, reversed

44. Hann biður teg í smiðju við sær, tá verður skamt til dags, men so snart tú kemur har, tú rennur burt sum vaks.
- He will ask you to go to the smithy with him, when the day is short,²⁷ but as soon as you get there, you will run away like wax.
45. Hann veit, at Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
honum er ekki at eggja,
hann biður teg í smiðju við sær
stórar stengur at sleggja.
- He knows that Sjúrdur Sigmundarson is easy to goad,²⁸
he will ask you to go to the smithy with him to hammer big metal bars.²⁹ 46. Tá ið tú kemur í hallina inn, legg teg niður sjúkan,
svarar tú honum eittans orð, høvur av herðum fúka.”
- When you come into the hall, lay yourself down as if ill, if you answer him with just one word, heads will fly off shoulders.” 47. Sjúrdur kom í hallina inn, var so síðla á kvöldi,
dvørgurin var í síni smiðju, smíddi við stórum eldi.
- Sjúrdur came into the hall,
it was so late in the evening,
the dwarf was in his smithy, he forged by a large fire.
48. Dvørgurin skuldi í hallir ganga, sum hann plagdi fyrr, hann sær standa ein stóran hest bundnan við hallardyr.
- The dwarf was about to walk into the hall,
as he usually did,
when he sees a large horse standing tied up by the hall door.
49. Yvrið dregur at dvørginum, hann gerst í kinnar reyð, setti spjót í hallargátt, hurð av hongslum fleyg.
- The dwarf became incensed, his cheeks became red,
he drove a spear into the threshold of the hall,
the door flew off its hinges.
50. Dvørgurin so til orða tekur, tað var alt so brátt:
“Hvat er hetta fyri ein kempa, her er komin í nátt?”
- The dwarf then speaks,
it happened so quickly: “What kind of warrior is this,³⁰ that has come here tonight?”

here to preserve the sense in the translation.

27 This seems to mean when there is not much of the day left.

28 Honum er ekki at eggja is an idiom meaning easy to goad.

29 Stengur can also mean spear or lance.

30 Kempa, which we have translated as warrior, can also mean hero or giant.

51. Dvørgurin tók sítt gylta spjót, letst í brynju nýggja:
“Skaffið fram ta miklu kempu, bráðliga vil eg hann síggja!”
- The dwarf took his gilded spear, and puts on new armour: “Fetch that mighty warrior,
I want to see him right now!”
52. Tá svaraði dvørgamoyggin: “Lat tað nú so vera,
hann er her av neyðum komin, tú skalt honum einki gera.”
- Then the dwarf maiden answered: “Now let it be,
he has come here because of trouble, you shall do nothing to him.” 53. Tað var yndig dvørgamoyggin, tekur at faðir at læra: “Kempan er bæði mikil og mødd, tú skalt hann ikki skaða.”
- It was the lovely dwarf maiden,
she begins to instruct her father: “The warrior is both great and tired, you shall do him no harm.” 54. Dvørgurin brá sín bitra brand, Sjúrða ætlar at vega, dvørgamoyggin um oddin tók: “Elva nú ongan trega!”
- The dwarf brandished his sharp sword, intending to slay Sjúrður, the dwarven maiden grasped the point:
“Cause no hurt now!”
55. Dvørgurin kastar gyltum brandi, allur í gulli skín: “Sjúrður, gakk at breiða borði, drekki bæði mjøð og vín!”
- The dwarf threw the gilded sword,
shining with gold:
“Sjúrður, go to the wide table, drink both mead and wine!” 56. Eg veit tað, Sjúrður Sigmundarson, tær er ikki at eggja,
tú skalt koma í mína smiðju stórar stengur at sleggja.”
- I know, Sjúrður Sigmundarson, that you are easy to goad, you shall come into my smithy to hammer big metal bars.” 57. Sjúrður upp frá borði steig, skuldi í smiðju fara, mintist aftur, at dvørgamoyggin bað hann ikki svara.
- Sjúrður rose up from the table,
he was about to go to the smithy, he remembered that the dwarf maiden told him not to answer.
58. “Eg skal geva tær brynjuna, gjørd er av silvuri hvíta, hvar tú verður í striði staddur, hana man einki bíta.
- “I shall give you armour, which is made of white silver,
when you are in battle, nothing may cut it.

59. Eg skal geva tær spjót so gott, gjört av góðum treysti, stikk so mannliga til,
ikki skal tað bresta.”
- I shall give you such a good spear, made very strong,³¹
stab with it in a manly way, it won't break.”
60. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin skín so víða,
Sjúrður klæðist for síni song,
hann býr seg heim at ríða.
- Early in the morning,
the sun shone so widely,
Sjúrður dresses himself before his bed, he readies himself for riding home.
61. Svaraði Sjúrður Sigmundarson, tungu ber so snjalla: “Hoyr tú, yndig dvørgamoyggin,
flyt meg heim til halla!”
- Sjúrður Sigmundarson replied,
he spoke so eloquently:
“Listen, lovely dwarf maiden, get me home to the hall!”³²
62. Svaraði yndig dvørgamoyggin
av so tungari sorg:
“Eg skal flyta teg so langt, at tú sært Hjalpreks borg.”
- The lovely dwarf maiden answered grief-stricken:
“I shall get you so far that you see Hjalprek's castle.” 63. Hon fylgdi honum so langt á leið við trá og tunga sorg, inntil, hyggi [eg], fyrst tey sóu Hjalpreks kongins borg.
- She led him so far on the journey with grief and deep sorrow, until, I see, that they first saw King Hjalprek's castle.
64. Har mundu tey skiljast at við trá og tunga treyt, hann kysti hana so sötan koss, at vín á vørrum fleyt.
- There they were separated with grief and great difficulty, he kissed her so sweetly, like wine flowed over the lips.³³ 65. Dvørgamoyggin aftur vendi, hon feldi tár á kinn, Sjúrður gekk til hallar heim for Hjalprek kongin inn.
- The dwarf maiden turned back, tears fell on her cheek, Sjúrður went home to the hall, before King Hjalprek.

31 The word treystur has connotations of it being durable.

32 He is asking the dwarf maiden to help him get back home. He is literally asking to be conveyed or transported.

33 This likely means the kiss was sweet as wine.

THE BEAUTIFUL DWARF MAIDEN OR DWARF MAIDEN II (DVØRGAMOYGGIN FAGRA OR DVØRGAMOY II)

1. Ásmundur saðlar gangaran sín, Ásmundur saddles his horse, hann ríður út av veldi: he rides out from his realm: “Ei kundi eg ta jomfrú fá, “I could not have the maiden, higar kom á kvøldi.” that came here last night.”
2. Ásmundur ríður út árla morgun Ásmundur rides out early in the morning, við sínum fylgdarsveini, with his companion, kongurin flutti moyna heim, the king took¹ the maiden home, ið dvørgurin hevði í heimi. that the dwarf had in his home.
3. Kongurin kemur inn árla morgun, The king comes in early in the morning, talar til dreingir fróar: and speaks to the cheerful heroes: “Tit skulu fara um landið út “You shall go around the kingdom brúdleypsólki at bjóða! to invite the wedding guests!
4. Sjálvur eri eg manna maki, I myself am the equal of men, brøður eigi eg fleiri, I have many brothers, ríðið fram á Sjúrdar fund, ride to meet Sjúrdur, tí hann er á háttari meiri! because he is better in demeanour!
5. Kvittið fram yvir Húnaland, Hasten over Húnaland, fornum kempum at bjóða, to invite ancient heroes, kenni eg Ásmund kellingarson I know Ásmundur kellingarson² og hansara dreingir góðar.” and his good heroes.” 6. Sveinar riðu á markir út The king’s men rode out on the fields, vítt um vegir allar, far and wide on all roads, riðin er Larsin dvørgakongur Larsin the dwarven king has ridden av skógnum heim til hallar. from his forest home to the hall.
7. Dvørgurin kastar reyðum skildri, The dwarf throws down his red shield, í borgum sær hann einki, in his castle he sees nothing, burt er bæði skjöldur og svørð, both shield and sword are gone, og horvin brúður av beinki. and the woman has disappeared from the bench.

¹ Literally it says he moved or relocated her home.

² Ásmundur’s byname means “son of a hag” or “son of a woman.”

8. Ásmundur ríður á bergið fram við tílíkan brandin ein: “Ætlar tú ekki moynna at hevna, ið kongurinn flutti heim?”
- Ásmundur rides forth to the hill with such a sword:
“Are you not intending to avenge the maiden,
that the king took home?”³
9. “Bæði snart og skundiliga leggst mær nú í minni, burt er bæði skjöldur og svørð, nái eg ekki á sinni.”
- “Both quick and hastily,
I continue to remember it,⁴ the shield and sword are both gone, I can’t get at them at this time.” 10. Ásmundur so til orða tekur, mælir á tungu inni: “Eg skal læna tær skjöld og svørð, betri er ekki at finna.”
- Ásmundur then begins to speak,
saying:
“I shall lend you a shield and sword, any better are not to be found.” 11. Læna skal eg tær skjöldin tann og svørðið tað hitt besta, sjálvur skal eg í ferðini fara tann Húnakong at gesta.”
- I shall lend you the best shield and sword,
I will go on the journey myself, to visit the King of the Huns.” 12. Riðu teir til hallar heim fast av miklum alvi, sum kongurinn og tann dvørgamoy sótu í búnum talvi.
- They rode home to the hall though of mighty strength, as the king and that dwarf maiden sat playing chess.⁵ 13. Ein kom maður í hallina inn,
sigur øllum frá: “Eg sær fult eitt átjan hundrað at borgararmi gá.”
- One man came into the hall,
and tells everyone:
“I see a full eighteen hundred men, approaching the wing of the castle.”⁶ 14. Kongurinn upp frá borði steig, hann studdist við skjöld og svørð: “Burt er Høgni og alt mítt lið, teir eru so leingi til ferða.”
- The king rose from the table, he put on his shield and sword: “Høgni and all my troops are gone, they have been travelling for so long.”

3 The king (who has not been named) has abducted the maiden.

4 This is the narrator referring to the contents of the ballad.

5 This literally means they sat at a prepared chess table.

6 This could also imply fortress.

15. Kongurinn sló sín hönd mótt borð og dregur svörð av skeiðum: "Nú vildi eg, Sjúrdur og Virgar sterki vóru í borgum heima!" The king slammed his hand against the table and draws the sword from its scabbard: "Now I wish that Sjúrdur and Virgar the strong were home in the castle!"
16. Hann talar til Gíslar, bróður sínn: "Mítt mál kannst tú væl greina, bið hann koma í brúðarhús at drekka tann mjóðinn reina!" He speaks to Gíslar his brother: "You can explain my intention well, invite them to come to the bridal house⁷ to drink the pure mead!"
17. "Standið ei löngur við borgararm, löysið tær saðilreimar, býður hann tær í brúðarhús at drekka tann mjóðinn reina!" "Don't stand any longer by the wing of the castle, loosen the saddlestraps, he invites you to the bridal house to drink the pure mead!"
18. "Býður hann mér í brúðarhús at drekka tann mjóðinn hvíta, her standi eg nú herklæddur so ógvuligur at líta." "He invites me to the bridal house to drink the white mead,⁸ I stand here now dressed for battle, so terrible to behold.⁹
19. Vil hann ekki farligt fljóð senda mér til handa, so skal hann brynja út allt sítt lið at verja ríki og landa." If he does not want to hand me the dangerous woman, then he should armour all his troops to defend the kingdom and land."
20. Árla var um morgunin, sólinn roðar í fjöll, leggja sínar bardagar skamt frá kongins höll. It was early in the morning, the sun reddened the mountains, they place their battles a short distance from the king's hall.
21. Ásmundur ríður í herin fram, ætlaði sær at vinna, kongurinn reið honum straks ímótt, har mundu tveir reystrir finnast. Ásmundur rides to the army, intending to win, the king rode immediately against him there two brave men could be found.

⁷ The place where the bride and bridegroom receive guests.

⁸ This could also be a question: "Is he inviting me to the bridal house...?"

⁹ This is presumably the dwarf king speaking.

22. Kongurinn gav so stórt eitt hogg av so góðum treysti,
so sló hann til Ásmund, hann fell av sínum hesti. The king gave such a mighty blow of such great strength, he struck Ásmundur,
he fell off his horse.
23. Ásmundur stoyttist í jørðina niður, sum hann var vanur at gera, út kom kongins dýra drottning, væl kann rúnir skera. Ásmundur plunged to the ground, as he was want to do,
out came the king's dear queen,
who can carve runes well.
24. Hon tók frá honum mœðið alt og alt hans illsku grand, sjónligur var hann hvørjum manni, einki har hann vann. She took all the mead from him and all his ability to do wicked harm, he was visible to everyone, he has not won anything.¹⁰ 25. Dvørgurinn spennir sín hest við spora,
rætt sum fuglur í ský,
legði niður liðið alt og tók tað væna vív. The dwarf spurs his horse, just as the bird in the sky, he felled the whole army and took the beautiful woman.
26. Hann legði niður alt hans lið og tók tað væna vív, kongurinn misti góðs og land, behelt sítt egið lív. He felled his whole army and took the beautiful woman, the king lost property and land, but kept his own life.
27. Hann legði niður alt hans lið og tók tað fljóð, hann átti, eina ríður kongurinn aftur at sínum slotti. He felled his whole army and took the woman that belonged to him, the king rides alone
back to his castle.
28. Ein kom maður í hallina inn,
smílist undir lín:
“Nú kemur Sjúrdur Sigmundarson og Høgni bróðir tín.” One man came into the hall, secretly smiling:
“Now comes Sjúrdur Sigmundarson and your brother Høgni.” 29. “Vælkomin Høgni, bróðir mín! tú hevur so drúgvant riðið, tapt er bæði land og vív og so tað valdra liðið.” “Welcome Høgni my brother!
You have ridden for so long, both land and woman are lost and the army of outstanding men.”

¹⁰ Ásmundur has embarrassed himself.

30. “Eg havi farið um lond og ríki, men Virgar eg ikki fann, hann reið seg at biðja moy so langt í fremmanda land.”
- “I have travelled around lands and kingdoms,
but I haven’t found Virgar, he rode to a foreign land so far away to propose to a maiden.”¹¹
31. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, mælir av tungum inna: “Vit skulum ríða á bergið fram tann dvørgakong at finna.”
- Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered,
saying:
“We shall ride forth to the cliff to find that dwarf king.”
32. Árla var um morgunin, sólin skein bjørt á heiði, riðu so á bergið fram fast av miklari reiði.
- Early in the morning,
the sun shone brightly on the heath, then they rode to the cliff though in great anger.
33. Sjúrdur gekk at hellisdurum, var ikki gott at finna, unti sær ikki upp at lata, klývur tað stálið stinna.
- Sjúrdur walked to the doors of the cavern, it wasn’t easy to find,
he didn’t succeed in opening the door, he split the sturdy steel.
34. Moyggin sat fyri breiða borði, dvørgur í smiðju stendur: “Ofta er best frá monnum longst, enn tit skuldu verið frændur.”
- The maiden sat at a wide table, the dwarf stood in the smithy: “Often it is best to be a long way from men rather than to be their friends.” 35. “Frændur eru vit ikki í dag, tó lata vit tær stevna, til tess eru vit higar komnir bróður sakir at hevna.
- “We aren’t friends today, even though we have come to meet you, because of this we have come here to avenge our brother’s affairs.”¹² 36. Kongurin flutti moyinna heim, tað var so mikil vandi, tú hevur vogið liðið alt og røvað tað heila landið.”
- The king took the maiden home, there was such great danger, you have killed all the troops and have pillaged the whole land.” 37. Dvørgurin klæðir seg við stál bæði til hond og fót, riðu so frá hellisborg
burt í oyðin skóg.
- The dwarf clothes himself in steel,
both hands and feet,
he then rode away from the cavern fortress to a desolate forest.

11 The final two lines are reversed in the Faroese, and we have put them this way round to preserve sense in the English translation.

12 This must be Høgni speaking.

38. Høgni gav so stórt eitt hogg,
frá man frættast víða,
ikki beit svørð á stáli stinna, dvørgurin hevði smíðað. Høgni gave such a great blow, it has been told about far and wide,
the sword didn't bite into the sturdy steel
that the dwarf had forged.
39. Riðu saman á grønum vølli, er mær ei á tí hól,
síðan stríddust kempur tvær
fult í tímar tólv. They clashed on the green field,
I am not exaggerating,
then the two heroes fought
for a full twelve hours.
40. Dagurin tók at kvølda, fellur yvir døg, Høgni sterki undan dreiv, eitt spring for hvørt eitt hogg. The day turned to evening, dew was falling,
the strong Høgni gave ground,
one leap for every blow.
41. Høgni fell av hesti niður, møðin at honum seig, Sjúrður bindur hjálm á seg árla í sólarreið. Høgni fell off the horse, he had become tired, Sjúrður fastens on his helmet early in the sunrise.
42. Sjúrður gav so stórt eitt hogg,
frá man frættast víða,
ikki beit svørð á stáli stinna, dvørgurin hevði smíðað. Sjúrður gave such a great blow,
it has been told about far and wide,
the sword didn't bite into the sturdy steel
that the dwarf had forged.
43. Riðu saman á grønum vølli,
er mær [ei] á tí hól,
síðan stríddust kempur tvær
fult í tímar tólv. They clashed on the green field,
I am not exaggerating,
then the two heroes fought
for a full twelve hours.
44. Síðan stríddust kempur tvær hendan dag til enda, tyngist svørð í Sjúrðar hondum, tekur spjótum at senda. Then the two heroes fought to the end of this day, the sword is becoming heavy in Sjúrður's hands,
he begins to throw spears.
45. Kastar hann eitt, og kastar hann tvey,
og kastaði hann tað triðja.
Dvørgurin tók mót øllum teim, hann kendi ei til sviða. He throws one, and he throws two,
and he threw the third.
The dwarf caught all of them,¹³
he didn't feel any pain.

13 This may mean that he was hit by them all.

46. Sjúrdur vá upp sín bitra brand, tó hendur bóru hin seinan, feldi hann yvir dvørga høvur, einki varð honum at meini. Sjúrdur struck with his sharp sword, though he bore rather it late,¹⁴ he let it fall over the dwarf's head, nothing caused him any injury.
47. Dvørgurin gav so stórt eitt høg, tað hoyrdist út í Frans, høggur niður í Sjúrdar høvur hjálmm av høvdi hans. The dwarf gave such a great blow, it was heard all the way in France, strikes down on Sjúrdur's head and knocks his helmet off.
48. Dvørgurin gav so stórt eitt høg, Sjúrdi ætlaði tað, spretti brynju av baki hans, so Grani fell á knæ. The dwarf gave such a great blow, as Sjúrdur's intended,
he split the armour off his back,¹⁵ so that Grani fell on his knees.
49. Sjúrdur reiggjar svørðið umkring bæði av grimd og reiði, klývur av honum skjöldarnar, rivnaði brynjan breiða. Sjúrdur swings his sword around, both with ferocity and wrath,¹⁶ he splits the shields,
the large armour cracked.
50. Dvørgurin læt av skógnnum standa, fingið hevði hann sár:
"Hoyr tú, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, sigurin gevi eg tær!" The dwarf stops the fight in the forest, he had received a wound:
"Listen, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
I give you the victory!"
51. Riðu teir til hallar heim, Høgni og Sjúrdur svein, sum hin fagra dvørgamoyggin situr í borgum ein. They rode home to the hall, Høgni and Sjúrdur svein, where the beautiful dwarf maiden sits alone in the castle.
52. Bjørt sat frú við breiða borð og sýr tað hvíta lín, Sjúrdur flutti hana úr høll og so tað gull í skrí. The fair lady sat at a wide table and sews the white linen, Sjúrdur took her from the hall and the gold in the chest as well.
53. Hann setti hana upp á hests síns bak
og førði hana heim til halla, tók bæði skart og skreyt, nú man ríman falla. He put her on the back of his horse and led her home to the hall, took her in both pomp and circumstance, now the ballad will end.

14 Sjúrdur is late to the battle, since Høgni has been fighting by himself.

15 This is the dwarf splitting the armour off Sjúrdur.

16 Now that Grani is on his knees, Sjúrdur is at the same level as the dwarf and is able to hit him hard with his sword. This is what Sjúrdur planned.

54. Hann flutti hana ekki í Júkagarð, He did not take her to Júki's court, men heim í hœll til sín: but home to his own hall:¹⁷
"Høgni, heilsa konginum heim, "Høgni, send a greeting home to the king, at hetta er lönin mín!" tell him that this is my reward." 55. Hann setti hana blant He put her in the crowd of maidens, moyggjaskara, even though she was unwilling, hóast hon vildi treyð, she aided Ásmundur very well, Ásmundi dugnaði hon sára væl, when he was in peril.
tá hann var staddur í neyð.
56. Høgni átti ein son av sær, Høgni had a son, hann bar faðirs navn, he has his father's name, inntil hann vá Artala kong, until he defeated King Artala,
sum víða gongur [av] sagn. as tales famously tell.
57. Inntil hann vá Artala kong, Until he defeated King Artala, sum víða gongur [av] sagn, as tales famously tell,
vant hann upp síni silkisegl he hoisted his silk sail, og sigldi so inn í havn. and sailed into the harbour.
58. Hann sigldi inn á eina maka havn, He sailed into a quiet harbour, har legði hann seg við frið, there he laid in peace, inntil hevndar sakir vóru, until the quarrel was avenged, brynjaði hann sítt lið. he armoured his troops.
59. Síðan kallaði hann Aldrias, After that he was called Aldrias, tí honum var eingin at ráða; because none could rule over him; hann var ungur og óstiltur he was young and impetuous í sjálvsins ráði draga. following his own decisions.¹⁸ 60. Ráddi hann fyrri Húnalandi He ruled over Húnaland eftir Artans deyða, after Artan's death, kallaði hann Ásmund Aldriansson, he was called Ásmundur Aldriansson, tí hann bar kinn so reyða. because his cheeks were so red.

17 The king would have been expecting Sjúrdur to bring the maiden home to him, but Sjúrdur takes her away for himself.

18 This literally means he followed his own advice.

ÁSA THE DWARF MAIDEN OR DWARF MAIDEN III (ÁSA DVØRGAMOY OR DVØRGAMOY III)

|---|---|
| 1. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin skín so víða,
Sjúrdur klæðist for síni song,
hann býr seg út at ríða. | Early in the morning,
the sun shone so widely,
Sjúrdur gets dressed in front of his bed,
he readies himself to ride. |
| 2. Sjúrdur reið á skógvin fram eystur um heyggin brúna,
opnan sá hann gullsal,
og gullið læk í túni. | Sjúrdur rode into the forest
east of the brown mound,
he saw a golden hall open,
and the gold spilled out into the courtyard. |
| 3. Túnið var av marmorsteini, hurðar av fílabeyni,
hongslini vóru [av] syfrisviði,
bjálkar av sildarteini. | The courtyard was made of marble,
the doors of ivory,
the hinges were of cedarwood, ¹
the beams of strips of silver. ² |
| 4. Har vóru hurðar av syfrisvið, málar við ídningshorni, glógvar so gull í gøtum har,
sum ljómur av havrakorni. | There were doors of cedarwood, decorated with horn, ³
gold shines on the roads there, like the glistening of an oat grain. ⁴ |
| 5. Sjúrdur hugsar við sjálvum sær:
“Úti skal eg ikki standa, antin her búgva fólk ella trøll,
her fari eg inn at ganga.” | Sjúrdur thinks to himself:
“I shall not stand outside, whether people or trolls live here,
I shall go in here.” |
| 6. Sjúrdur gekk í hallina inn,
skín sum fonnin hvíta,
dvørgamoyggjin fyri sat,
innilig at líta. | Sjúrdur walked into the hall,
shining like white snow, the dwarf maiden sat before him beautiful ⁵ to look at. |

1 í Króki (Sandoyarbók, vol. 2, p. 157n3) notes that sifrisi should be read syprisviði.

2 í Króki (Sandoyarbók, vol. 2, p. 157n4) notes that sildarteinur should read silvdarteini.

3 According to Hammershaimb and Jakobsen, Færøsk anthologi, vol. 2, p. 137, this is an indeterminable type of horn.

4 The line here is sum ljómur av havrakorni. Ljómur in modern Faroese would mean “sound,” but clearly shining gold cannot be compared to the sound of an oat grain. We have preferred to understand it as meaning something closer to the Old Norse ljómi, meaning “beam, ray, radiance,” and this is also the interpretation found in Hammershaimb, Sjúrdar Kvæði, 191.

5 We have used the reading from B. Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 287, st. 11, unnilig, since inniligur (meaning in a heartfelt way) does not make sense here.

7. Svaraði Ása dvørgamoyggj: “Tú ert ikki borin at standa,” snúgvuliga úr sessi brá, bar honum stól til handa.
- Ása the dwarf maiden said:
 “You are too highborn to stand,”⁶ she rose from the seat quickly, and carried a chair to him.
8. “Mangur hefur á skógvin riðið frúur at biðja sær, higar er eingin komin tann, líknast hefur at tær.”
- “Many have ridden through the forest to ask for a lady’s hand, none have come here
 that can be compared to you.” 9. Hon fylgdi honum í gullsal, hildust tey um hendur:
 “Her kannst tú við eygum sjá, hvør vítt mín sal er rendur.
- She led him to the golden hall, they held each other’s hands: “Here you can see with your own eyes, how extensively my hall is edged with gold.”⁷ 10. Hoyr tað, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, tú ert so nýtur drongur,
 her kannst tú við eygum sjá,
 hvør vítt mín salin gongur.”
- Listen, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
 you are such a brave hero, here you can see with your eyes, how spacious my hall is.” 11. “Hoyr tú, Ása dvørgamoyggin, fagra og so fríða,
 hvussu eita teir garpar tveir, á henda skógvin ríða?”
- “Listen, Ása dwarf maiden,
 so fair and beautiful, what are the two warriors named who ride in this forest?” 12. “Hálvdan og hann Eirikur her hava riðið leingi, ríða seg í Ásgarðar
 at royna Óðins dreingir.
- “Hálvdan and Eirikur
 have ridden here for a long time, they are riding to Ásgarðar to test Óðin’s heroes.
13. Hálvdan og hann Eirikur her hava riðið á sinni, ríða seg í Ásgarðar
 at hitta Óðin inni.
- Hálvdan and Eirikur
 have ridden here before, they are riding to Ásgarðar
 to meet Óðin inside.

⁶ This line literally means “you are not born to stand,” which we interpret to mean too highborn to stand.

⁷ That gold edges the hall here is our interpretation, as rendur is often used as in rendur í gullið.

14. Tað er so vant í tygara landi,
har blæs vindur og kavi, ríður so mangur einsamallur, hann rænar tygara fæ.
It is so bad⁸ in your land, where wind and snow blow,⁹ so many ride alone
that steal your property.¹⁰ 15. Tað er so vant í tygara landi,
har blæs veður og vindur, betri er í gullborgum ást við meg at binda.”
It is so bad in your land, where weather and wind blow, it is better to fall in love with me in golden castles.”¹¹ 16. “Hoyr tú, Ása dvørgamoyggjin, tað mást tú ei stunda,
eg gifti ikki óðal mítt
burtur á heidnar grundir.
“Listen, Ása dwarf maiden,
you must not long for that,
I won’t marry my ancestral property¹² away on heathen earth.
17. Hoyr tað, Ása dvørgamoyggjin, tað mást tú ei vænta,
eg gifti ikki óðal mítt burt á heidna landa.”
Listen, Ása dwarf maiden,
you must not expect that,
I won’t marry my ancestral property away in heathen lands.” 18. Tað var Ása dvørgamoyggjin, øll í gulli glæsti,
hon gekk seg at gullkistu, upp við mentum læsti.
It was Asa the dwarf maiden, who shone all in gold,
she went to a golden chest,
and unlocked it with dexterity.
19. Hon sendi honum klæðini, glógva sum gullið reyða: “Ei man *nakar í tygara landi tílikar mentir eiga.
She passed him the clothes,
they shine as red gold: “None in your land have such skills.¹³

8 Vant should be vánt (from vándur), meaning bad.

9 The first two lines of the stanza are formulaic.

10 We have taken this reading from variant B of the ballad. Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 287, st. 25. What it literally says here is “so many ride alone, he steals your property.”

11 The final two lines of the stanza are the other way round in the Faroese, but we have reversed them here to preserve meaning in the English translation. These lines are also formulaic.

12 Óðal is allodial property.

13 This seems to mean that none would be skilled enough to make such clothes.

20. So væl mást tú tey klæði slíta, glógva sum gullið reyða,
leingi hava ligið á kistubotni eftir tann Dagmors deyða.”
You must wear out those clothes well,¹⁴ they shine like red gold, they have lain at the bottom of the chest since Dagmor’s death.”
21. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, gull ber seg á hand: “Eg føri ikki heiðin klæði aftur í vára land.”
Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered, carrying gold on his arm:¹⁵ “I will not bring heathen clothes back to our land.”
22. Hon gav honum brynjuna, gjørd var av silvuri hvíta: “Tak við, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, vita um tú mant nýta!”
She gave him the armour;
it was made of white silver: “Take this, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, see if you might make use of it!”
23. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, gull ber seg á hand: “Eg føri ikki heidna brynju aftur í vára land.”
Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered, carrying gold on his arm:
“I will not bring heathen armour
back to our land.”
24. Svaraði Ása dvørgamoyggjin, fagra og hin fríða: “Dvølst í nátt og ver hjá mær; í morgin skalt tú ríða.” Ása the dwarf maiden answered, the fair and beautiful one: “Stay tonight and be with me, you shall ride tomorrow.” 25. “Eg dvøljist ikki longur hjá tær, enn drekka skal moyggja minni, skunda lati eg míni ferð, vit hittast annað sinni.” “I will not stay any longer with you, but shall drink to the memory of maidens,
I will hurry on my journey, we will meet again another time.” 26. Sjúrdur svav í heygnum, tað var alt so brátt,
hann gat barn við dvørgamoyggi
á teirri somu nátt.
Sjúrdur slept in the mound,
it was all so sudden,
he conceived a child with the dwarf maiden
on the same night.
27. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin skín so víða,
Sjúrdur klæðist for síni song,
hann býr seg út at ríða.
Early in the morning,
the sun shone far and wide,
Sjúrdur dressed before his bed,
he readies himself to ride.

14 He must wear these clothes until they are completely worn out, because they are so valuable.

15 These are arm rings.

28. “Nær skal eg bryggja, nær skal eg blanda vín, nær skal eg tín aftur vænta, Sjúrdur, at vitja mín?”
- “When shall I brew, when shall I mix wine,
when shall I expect you, Sjúrdur, to visit me?” 29. “Væl mást tú bryggja, væl mást tú mjóðin blanda, tá triði máni úti er, skalt tú meg aftur vænta.”
- “You must brew well,
you must mix the mead well, when the third month has passed, you shall expect me.”
30. Sjúrdur fór av høllini út, heldur sær á gleim,
tá var Grani burtur lopin,
hann skuldi ríða heim.
- Sjúrdur went out of the hall,
he was in a cheerful mood,
Grani had run away,
but he should ride home.
31. Sjúrdur fór av høllini út,
heldur sær á gleim,
tá var Grani burtur lopin,
hann skuldi ríða heim.
- Sjúrdur went out of the hall,
he was in a cheerful mood,
Grani had run away,
but he should ride home.
32. “Eg skal læna tær hestin tann, inniligur at ríða,
so loypur hann yvir dalir og fjøll, sum aðrir í grøna líða.
- “I shall lend you that horse, good to ride,
he leaps over valleys and mountains,
as others do over green slopes.
33. Ríð honum heilur og happadrúgvur;
tað er ikki vandi,
sjáldan loysti faðir mín falkan tann úr bandi.
- Ride him healthy and happy,
there is no danger,
my father seldom untied that horse¹⁶ from its tethers.
34. Ríð honum heilur og happadrúgvur,
bæði við gleði og gleim,
tá tú kemur úr skógnum út, tú sært tín fola ein.”
- Ride him healthy and happy,
both with happiness and cheerfulness, when you come out of the forest, you will see your foal.”
35. Hon fylgdi honum so langt á leið, bað honum góðan dag:
“Far væl, heilur og happadrúgvur, alt gangi tær væl!”
- She went with him so far on the way,
wished him a good day:
“Fare well, be healthy and happy, may everything go well for you!” 36. Hon fylgdi honum so langt á leið, bað honum góðan frið:
“Far væl, heilur og happadrúgvur, alt gangi tær við!”
- She went with him so far on the way,
wished him peace:
“Fare well, be healthy and happy,
may everything go your way!”

16 Falkur is a heiti used in ballads for horse. It can also mean falcon (the literal meaning) or, in ballads, ship.

37. Sjúrdur reið eftir vegnum fram,
bæði við gleði og gleim,
tá hann kom úr skógnum út, hann sá sín fola ein.
- Sjúrdur rode along the road both in happiness and cheerfulness, when he came out of the forest,
he saw his foal.
38. Tað er Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, tungu ber hann snjalla: “Eg veit mær eingi *sviðri¹⁷ ráð enn ríða heim til halla.”
- It is Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, he is so eloquent:
“I know of no worse advice, than to ride home to the hall.” 39. Sjúrdur skuldi til hallar ríða,
frá man frættast víða,
hann sær mann úr fjalli koma, bráðliga mót sær líða.
- Sjúrdur was going to ride to the hall,
such is told far and wide, he sees a man come down from the mountain,
suddenly heading towards him.
40. Har kom ein so grimmur risi, Sjúrdur ikki kendi,
hann hevði eygað eitt í heysi, finskan boga í hendi.
- There came such a gruesome giant, Sjúrdur didn't realize,
he had one eye in his head, and a Finnish bow in his hand.
41. Sjúrdur skuldi til hallar ríða, mátti aftur venda,
risin skeyt sína stong í vøll, tá mátti kappin standa.
- Sjúrdur was going to ride to the hall,
he had to turn back,
the giant shot his long spear into the field,
then the hero had to stop.
42. Sváraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, mælir á tungu inna: “Lova mær til hallar heim,
vit hittast annað sinni.”
- Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered,
saying:
“Let me go home to the hall, we'll meet another time.” 43. Risin so til veitslu tekur, mælir í fyrsta orði: “Tú nært ikki til hallar heim, og ikki av einum spori.
- The giant then begins to speak, he first speaks these words:
“You won't make it home to the hall, and not one step further.¹⁸ 44. Tí tú hevur sovið hjá dvørgamoygni,
ikki sagt mær frá,
har for skalt tú, Sjúrdur, ikki til hallar ná!”
- Because you have slept with the dwarf maid,
and not told me about it before, that's why, Sjúrdur, you won't make it to the hall!”

17 í Króki (Sandoyarbók, vol. 2, p. 159n2) states that in the manuscript this word is sigri and notes that CCF has sviðri, while the edition suggests síðri as the correct reading, meaning “worse” (cf. the Icelandic adjective in the comparative síðri).

18 This is how Hammershaimb (Sjúrdar Kvæði, 193) understands this line.

45. Risin gevur hoggini tung, sum tey varpa grót,
stundum flýddi kappin undan, stundum helt ímót.
- The giant gives heavy blows,
that send rocks flying,
at times the hero dodged,
at times he fought back.
46. Sjúrdur skuldi til hallar ganga, tykist komin í treyt,
tað var tann svartí fjallatussi,
stongina á hann skeyt.
- Sjúrdur was going to go to the hall,
he seemed to have got into trouble, it was the black mountain giant, he hurled his lance at him.¹⁹ 47. Sjúrdur skuldi til hallar ganga, mátti venda aftur,
tá kom Grani leypandi,
varð honum við tað lætt.
- Sjúrdur was going to go to the hall,
had to turn back,
then Grani came running,
with that it became easy for him.
48. Tá kom Grani leypandi, jørð við hógvar tróð,
gæsar uppi við høvðinum, aftur á herðar stóð.
- Then Grani came running,
with his hoofs he trod the ground, he tears along with his head back to his shoulders.
49. Tá kom Grani leypandi, hansara sporar ringja, snarliga vendi síðu til,
Sjúrdur í saðil springa.
- Then Grani came running,
his footsteps²⁰ ringing, he quickly turned side on,
Sjúrdur leapt into the saddle.
50. Sjúrdur leyp í saðilin upp yvir leysan loga, studdi seg hvørki við skjöld ei svørð,
ei við saðilbuga.
- Sjúrdur leapt up into the saddle over loose flame,²¹ supported himself with neither shield nor sword,
nor with saddle bow.
51. “Tú gert einki at brigða mær dvørgamoyнна at gifta, nú skal eg, tín fjallatussi, høggum við teg skifta!”
- “You do nothing by reproaching me for marrying the dwarf maid, now I shall exchange blows with you you mountain giant!”²²

19 The giant hurled his lance at Sjúrdur.

20 Here we have interpreted sporar to mean footsteps rather than spurs, which would be the other reading, since it seems to refer to the horse.

21 The first two lines of the stanza are formulaic and the stanza as a whole can be found in other ballads (with the name of the character replaced). “Loose flame” seems to mean flickering flames that are high.

22 These two lines are reversed in Faroese, but we have exchanged them to preserve the meaning in English translation.

52. Bardust fullar tógva dagar, hvørgin sigur fekk,
inntil tann hin triðja,
ið sól til viðá gekk. They fought for two full days, neither was victorious,
until that third day,
as the sun was setting.
53. Bardust fullar tógva dagar, hvørgin sigur vann,
inntil tann hin triðja,
ið sól til viðá rann. They fought for two full days, neither was victorious,
until that third day,
as the sun went down.
54. Risin sipar jarnstongina, tað var alt so fast,
Grani kundi skáka væl, hann misti fyrsta kast. The giant threw the iron lance, it was so hard,²³
Grani could turn and twist well, he missed the first throw.
55. Sjúrdur rendi mót risanum, øllum tókti undur,
høgg so tann hin grimma risa í miðjum kníggjum sundur. Sjúrdur went against the giant, everyone thought it a miracle, then he chopped that gruesome giant in two at mid-knee.
56. Tað var tann svartí fjallatussi, læt ikki á sær finna, stubbarnar setti hann niður í jørð, hann bardist ikki minna. It was the black mountain giant, he didn't let it show,
he planted the stumps on the ground, he didn't fight any worse for it.
57. Tað var Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
sínnum svørði brá,
hann kleyv tann hin grimma risa sundur í lutir tvá. It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
he brandished his sword,
he chopped that gruesome giant
into two pieces.
58. Tað er Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
heldur sær á gleim,
síðani tað ríður hann aftur til hallar heim. It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
he was in a cheerful mood,
after that he rides
back home to the hall.
59. Sjúrdur gekk í hallina inn,
var so síðla á kvøldi, Hjalprekur fyri borði situr við sítt dreingjavelði. Sjúrdur went into the hall, it was so late in the evening, Hjalprekur sits at the table with his group of heroes.

23 The giant threw the spear very hard.

60. Hjalprekur kongur til orða tekur við sítt dreingjavelði: “Hoyr tað, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, hvar hevur tú verið á kvøldi?” King Hjalprekur says with his group of heroes:
“Listen, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, where have you been for the evening?” 61. Sjúrdur svarar honum aftur,
frá man frættast víða:
“Møtti mær ein fjallatussi, hann beyð mær at stríða.” Sjúrdur answers back to him, it is told far and wide:
“I met a mountain giant,
he challenged me to fight.”
62. Sjúrdur svarar honum aftur við allskyns makt og meingi: “Møtti mær ein fjallatussi, hann dvaldi meg so leingi.” Sjúrdur answers back to him with all kinds of might and strength:²⁴
“I met a mountain giant,
he delayed me for so long.”
63. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin skín so víða,
Sjúrdur klæðist for síni song,
hann býr seg út at ríða. Early in the morning,
the sun shone so widely,
Sjúrdur dressed before his bed,
he readies himself to ride.
64. Sjúrdur reið á skógvín fram eystur um heyggin brúna,
opnan sá hann gullsal,
gullið læk í túni. Sjúrdur rode through the forest east of the brown mound,
he saw the golden hall open,
the gold spilled into the courtyard.
65. Sjúrdur gekk í hallina inn aftur í sama heyg, tá sá hann, hvar dvørgamoyggin lá har inni deyð. Sjúrdur went into the hall, back into the same mound, then he saw where the dwarf maiden lay dead in there.
66. Grón hann hana í heyggin niður, so er greint ífrá,
mikið gull og mentarsnót legði hann henni hjá. He buried her down in the mound, so I’ve been told,
a fine woman, and much gold he lay by her.
67. Og so mundi hann hjá henni grava moybarnið tað hitt fríða, síðan mundi Sjúrdur aftur til hallar ríða. And by her he buried the beautiful girl-child,²⁵ then Sjúrdur
rode back to the hall.

24 We have interpreted meingi as likely referring to megi, meaning “strength.” The reading of meingi in the sense of “multitude” makes no sense here.

25 This is Sjúrdur’s daughter.

THE BALLAD OF KVØRFINN OR DWARF MAIDEN V (KVØRFINNS TÁTTUR OR DVØRGAMOY V)

1. Tíðrikur situr á Brattingsborg, hann skín sum reyðargull, nú skal ríma eitt dvørgafrøði, nú gerst mín ríma full.
Tíðrikur sits in Brattingsborg,
he shines like red gold, now I will compose verses on the theme of dwarves,
now my ballad-composing is concluded.
2. Tíðrikur situr á Brattingsborg, hann sær seg út so víða: “Nú lystir meg á Birtingsskóg á heiðinmark at ríða.”
Tíðrikur sits in Brattingsborg,
he looks out far and wide: “Now I want to go to Birtingsskógur to ride to the heathen forest.”
3. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson
fyrsta orðið tá:
“Ríður tú á Birtingsskóg, tú kemur har ikki frá.”
Virgar Valintsson answered
the first word then:
“If you ride to Birtingsskógur, you won’t escape from there.”
4. Út varð loystur gangarin, Tíðrikur skuldi at ríða, heima sat Virgar Valintsson
eina so lítla tíð.
The steed was untethered, Tíðrikur was going to ride,
Virgar Valintsson sat at home for a short while.
5. Heima sat Virgar Valintsson
eina so lítla stund,
hann læt saðla Skemming tá, reið á sín harras fund.
Virgar Valintsson sat at home
for a little while,
then he had Skemmingur saddled,
and rode to find his lord.
6. Virgar steig á Skemming’s bak við Mimaring í hendi.
Skemmingur stóð á grønum vølli, á Birtingsskóg hann rendi.
Virgar stepped on Skemmingur’s back with Mimaring¹ in his hand, Skemmingur stood on the green field, he ran to Birtingsskógur.
7. Tað var Virgar Valintsson, á Skemming’s bak hann steig, Skemming rendi á Birtingsskóg, hann kongin aftur reið.
It was Virgar Valintsson,
he mounted onto Skemmingur’s back, Skemmingur ran to Birtingsskógur, he caught up with the king.

1 This is the name of Virgar’s sword.

8. Tað svaraði hann Tíðrikur, tá ið hann Virgar kendi: “Hvør er hesin av Tíðriks gørpum, ið með aftur rendi?”
- Tíðrikur answered with this,
when he recognized Virgar:
“Which of Tíðrikur’s heroes is this,
who caught up with me?”
9. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson, hann sá yvir skógin fríða: “Eg læt saðla mær Skemming tá, eg vildi ikki heima bíða.”
- Virgar Valintsson answered,
he looked over the beautiful forest:
“I had Skemmingur saddled,
I didn’t want to wait at home.” 10. Ríða teir á Birtingsskóg, søgur ganga frá,
Tíðrikur biður hestar hvíla:
“Vit skulu á skógin gá!”
- They ride to Birtingsskógur as the story relates,
Tíðrikur orders the horses to rest:
“We shall walk into the forest!”
11. Lógu teir á Birtingsskóg eina so lítla stund,
vaknaði Virgar Valintsson, hann hoyrði hestadund.
- They lay in Birtingsskógur
for a little while,
Virgar Valintsson woke up,
he heard the rumbling of horses.
12. Virgar leyp á Skemming’s bak, einki óttast hann tá, hann sær eina so mikla kempu ríða sær skamt ífrá.
- Virgar leapt on to Skemmingur’s back, he feared nothing then, he sees such a mighty a giant ride not far away from him.
13. Virgar leyp á Skemming’s bak, á sítt svørð hann lítur: “Nú skal taka til Mimaring, og vita, hvussu bítur.”
- Virgar leapt on Skemmingur’s back, he trusts his sword:
“Now I will take Mimaring, and see how well it bites.”² 14. Tað var Virgar Valintsson, læt at skógum standa,
møtti eina mikla kempu,
fátt kundi henni granda.
- It was Virgar Valintsson,
he went for the forest,³ he met a mighty giant,
few could hurt it.
15. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson,
hann sá tann mikla mann: “Hví ríður tú í Birtingsskóg í mín harras land?”
- Virgar Valintsson said,
he saw the mighty man:
“Why do you ride in Birtingsskógur on my lord’s land?”

² Literally “how it bites.”

³ He goes into the forest.

16. Yvrið dró at Sjúrdða unga,
søgur ganga frá,
hann hevði upp sítt búgvið svørð, hann tað í loftið brá.
Young Sjúrdður became incensed,
so stories tell,
he raised his readied sword,
he swung it through the air.
17. Sjúrdður brá sínnum bitra brandi, hann royndi góðar gripir, Virgar situr á Skemmings baki loftaði hvørja sipu.
Sjúrdður brandished his sharp sword,
he uses good arms,
Virgar sits on Skemmingur's back, he caught every blow.
18. Tá vaknaði hann Tíðrikur, hann hoyrir brandar falla, tekur hann til sítt góða svørð, hann letur á Virgar kalla.
Then Tíðrikur woke up,
he heard swords falling,
he takes his good sword, he calls on Virgar.
19. Enntá óttast Tíðrikur, hann hoyrir brandar syngja, burtur var Virgar Valintsson
við hesti og Mimaringi.
Even Tíðrikur is afraid,
he hears the swords sing, Virgar Valintsson is gone with horse and sword.
20. Sjúrdður høgdi ógvuliga, væl mundi Grammur duga, flýgur so eldur úr Virgars brynju, at skógurinn stóð í loga.
Sjúrdður hacked so terribly, Grammur⁴ was very capable, such sparks fly from Virgar's armour, that the forest was in flames.
21. Tíðrikur læt til hallar standa, heim av skógnum fer, gloymdi eftir á Birtingskóg bæði skjöld og svørð.
Tíðrikur went for the hall,
goes home from the forest, in Birtingskógur he forgot both shield and sword.
22. Sjúrdður høgdi ógvuliga, inntil hann var móður,
settist niður á grønan vøll, men ikki vóru dreingir fróir.
Sjúrdður hacked so terribly.
until he was tired,
he sat himself down on the green field, but the heroes weren't happy.
23. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson,
í víggi hevði staðið: “Siga skalt tú mær, mikli maður, hvar ert tú av frænda ræði?” Virgar Valintsson said,
he had been in battle:
“You have to tell me, mighty man, which family are you from?”

4 This is the name of Sjúrdður's sword.

24. “Sjúrða skalt tú nevna meg,
eg sigi tær satt ífrá,
næsti maður Hjalprek kongi bæði í gulli og ráði.”
- “You shall call me Sjúrður,
I tell you truthfully,
the closest man⁵ to King Hjalprekur, in both gold and authority.
25. Grani eitur gangari mín, Sjúrða skalt tú meg nevna,
næsti maður Hjalprek kongi bæði til gulls og evna.”
- Grani is the name of my steed,
you shall call me Sjúrður,
the closest man to King Hjalprekur in both gold and ability.”
26. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson
av so tungum bræði: “Hevði tú høggt við Mimaringi, eg hevði tær ikki bestaðið.”
- Virgar Valintsson answered with such heavy resentment: “Had you cut with Mimaring,
I would not have withstood you.”⁶ 27. Svaraði Sjúrður Sigmundarsonur, tá ið hann Virgar kendi: “Hvar er sjálvur Tíðrikur, ið teg higar sendi?”
- Sjúrður Sigmundarsonur answered,
when he recognized Virgar:
“Where is Tíðrikur himself who sent you here?”
28. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson, hann kann væl orðum greina: “Tíðrikur er á skógnum burtur við allar sínar sveinar.”
- Virgar Valintsson answered,
he can relate words well: “Tíðrikur is in the forest with all of his warriors.”
29. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson,
hann læt so orðum byrja: “Nú skal ríða for Tíðrik heim, og fleiri sømdir spyrja.”
- Virgar Valintsson answered,
he started his words like so: “Now we shall ride to Tíðrikur’s home, to gain more honour.”
30. Svaraði Sjúrður Sigmundarson, hann skeyt tann leik av hendi: “Tað er eingin á Brattingsborg, mínum gangara torir at venda.”
- Sjúrður Sigmundarson answered, he pushed that dispute to the side:
“There is no one on Brattingsborg, that dares to turn my steed away.” 31. Sjáldan skiljast leikir væl, geri tað ei at løyndu:
Sjúrður og Virgar Valintsson,
teir mundu hvør annan royndu.
- Disputes seldom end well, it is not to be kept a secret: Sjúrður and Virgar Valintsson,
they tested each other.

5 The man next in line in terms of power and wealth.

6 Virgar is mocking Sjúrður that he has the better sword.

32. So eru orð við ráðum greind, tó ei er um at røða:
Sjúrður og Virgar Valintsson
hvør mundi annan møða.
- Words are expounded as advice, though there is no reason to speak about this:
Sjúrður and Virgar Valintsson
each tired out the other.
33. So eru orð við ráðum greind, tó ei er um at dylja,
ríða dyst við ókendar menn, og sjáldan væl at skilja.
- Words are expounded as advice, though there is no reason to hide it, to ride and fight with unknown men, is seldomly to be understood well.
34. Svaraði Sjúrður Sigmundarson, hann mælir á sama sinni: “Vit skulu ríða á skógi fram og fleiri roysni vinna.”
- Sjúrður Sigmundarson, he speaks at the same time:
“We shall ride through the forest and perform more great deeds.”
35. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin skín so víða.
Sjúrður og Virgar Valintsson
á heidnar markir ríða.
- Early in the morning,
the sun shone far and wide.
Sjúrður and Virgar Valintsson
ride in heathen forests.
36. Sterkir royna stinna alva, ei man teimum bella,
hestar leypa, garpar flytast,
jørð um bógvar fella.
- The strong test the strength of the tough,⁷ they will not be injured, horses run, heroes are carried,
earth is thrown about the front legs.
37. Sterkir royna stinna alva, svørð við sporum draga,
hestar leypa, garpar flytast,
jørð um bógvar vaða.
- The strong test the strength of the tough, they draw swords as well as spurs,
horses run, heroes are carried,
the front legs wade through earth.
38. Hestar leypa, garpar flytast, svørð við sporum ringja, *hjálmar skína, grímur stýra, gyltir hjálmar syngja.
- Horses run, heroes are carried,
they let swords as well as spurs ring, helmets shine, halters steer, golden helmets sing.
39. Ríða yvir Birtingsskóg á tí sama sinni,
ei var annað tílíkt lið,
dreingir leggja í minni.
- They ride over Birtingsskógur at the same time, there was not another company like that,
heroes commit it to memory.

⁷ Lyngbye suggests a literal translation of “Stærke prøve store Kræfter” (the strong try great strengths) for this line. Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 410n35.

40. Ríða yvir Birtingskóg yvir mark og bleyta mýri,
ei var annað tílíkt lið
at sita til saðla dýra.
- They ride over Birtingskógur
over forest and soft meer,
there was not another company like that
that sit in costly saddles.
41. Ríða yvir Birtingskóg, sum risar í homrum byggja, dværgrar klæða fríðan sal, og tröll for fótum liggja.
- They ride over Birtingskógur,
as giants live in crags, dwarves adorn the beautiful hall,
and trolls lie under foot.
42. Síðla var um aftanin, dagurin tók at kvølda,
drekar taka at ýla hátt,
og úlvar taka at gella.
- Early in the evening, the day turned to evening,
dragons start to howl loudly,
and wolf howls start to echo.
43. Úlvar taka at ýla hátt, tað dregur at myrkum æli, sóu hvørki himmal ella jørð,
og neppa stig fyrri saðli.
- Wolves start to howl loudly,
a dark storm approaches,
they saw neither sky nor earth,
and hardly a step in front of the saddle.
44. Súu hvørki himmal ella jørð,
og neppa stig fyrri saðli,
ei høgdu fleiri tílíkir garpar verið í verri vali.
- They saw neither sky nor earth,
and hardly a step in front of the saddle, other such heroes had not been on a worse battlefield.
45. At syngja tók í homrum hátt, risar halgir njóta,
heitan eld við fótum troða, harðar málmar at bróta.
- Singing started high in the crags, giants enjoy holy days, tread hot fire with their feet,
to break hard ore.
46. Harðir steinar sundur sprungu, málmur við eitri rennur,
drekar hamra stórar stengur,
eldur í smiðju brennur.
- Hard rocks cracked apart, ore runs with poison, dragons hammer great bars,⁸ fire burns in the smithy.

8 The image here is of bars of metal that are hammered in a smithy (by dragons). Lyngbye translates this to giants (risser) doing the hammering. Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, p. 415, st. 45, but the Faroese clearly says dragons, as it does in Lyngbye's Faroese text.

47. Drekar hamra stórar stengur, gyltar brandar sleggja, óttast Virgar Valintsson, ilt var um at eggja. Dragons hammer great bars, pound golden swords,⁹ Virgar Valintsson is afraid,
evil was about to be instigated.
48. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson:
“Nú er aftur at venda.”
So var svørð í slíðrum heitt, teir kundu það ekki henda. Virgar Valintsson answered:
“Now we should turn back.”
The sword was so hot in its scabbard that they couldn’t hold it.
49. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
hann læt so orðum byrja: “Latið það ekki frættast heim, for Tíðriks garpar spyrjast!” Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered, he let the words start like this:
“Don’t let that get around at home, for Tíðrikur’s heroes to find out!”¹⁰
50. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, hann heldur á búnum stáli: “Minni sigist for Tíðriks garpum, dreingir gita við máli.” Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered, he’s grasping ornamented steel:
“Less than this can be told to Tíðrikur’s heroes,
heroes make conjectures with language.”¹¹
51. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson: “Vit skulu á skógvin ríða, hoyra fáa vit annan sang, tá ið náttin tekur at liða.” Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered:
“We shall ride through the forest,
we will hear another song, when the night nears it’s end.” 52. Ríða teir á skógvin fram, myrkt var teimum fyrí eyga, komu at tí húsinum, það skín sum gullið reyða. They ride through the forest, it was dark before their eyes,
they came to the house,
that shone like red gold.
53. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson: “Vit skulu hjá konum gista, morgin skulu vit föra heim alt það, ið lív kann lysta!” Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered: “We shall stay the night with the women, tomorrow we shall bring home whatever we want!”

⁹ Here and below we have translated sleggja as pound, meaning “powerfully hammer.”

¹⁰ Sjúrdur is saying that it should not be known widely that Virgar wanted to turn back in st. 48 (i.e., that he was afraid).

¹¹ Similarly to the stanza above, Sjúrdur is warning Virgar that if Tíðrikur’s men hear about this, they will gossip about Virgar being afraid.

54. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson: Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered: “Vit fara ekki úti at standa, vit skulu gista her í nátt, í morgin royna branda!” “We are not going to stand outside, we shall stay here tonight, tomorrow we shall test the swords!”
55. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson, Virgar Valintsson answered, hann tók tá til at tala: he started to speak then: “Nú skal leggja hjálmar av, í morgin hestar saðla!” “Now we shall take off our helmets, tomorrow we will saddle our horses!” 56. Gingu teir í húsið inn, They went into the house, tað skein sum gullið reyða, it shone like red gold, sóu fyrri borði standa they saw standing before the table mangar brandar beygar. many beautiful swords.¹²
57. Sóu fyrri borði standa They saw standing before the table mangar brandar beygar, many beautiful swords.
 sótu fyrri moyar tvær, Two maidens sat there before them,
 tær skína sum gullið reyða. they shine like red gold.
58. Sótu fyrri moyar tvær, Two maidens sat there before them, klæddar í silki smá, dressed in fine silk, dýrur drykkur á borði stendur, costly drink stands on the table, søgur ganga frá. so stories tell.
59. Sjúrdur tók teir dýru drykkir, Sjúrdur took the costly drinks, hann mundi ekki mangan biðja, he wasn't used to waiting, stillar sótu moyar tvær, the two maidens sat quiet, tað tókti teim best at tiga. it seemed to them best to be silent.
60. Tað var Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, hann læt so orðum byrja: he started speaking: “Hvør ræður fyrri hesi borg? tað ráði eg fyrst at spyrja.” “Who rules this castle?
 I want to ask that first.”
61. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson: Virgar Valintsson answered: “Vit skulu í borgum byggja, vilja tit ekki aftur svara, tit skulu fyrri brondum liggja.” “We shall stay at the castle, if you don't answer,
 you shall be placed before the swords.”

12 See note to st. 116 of Brynhildar táttur (pp. 62–63n70) for the difficulties in translating brandar beygar.

62. Svaraði onnur dvørgamoyin, øll í gulli skín:
 “Harri ræður fyri hesi borg er Kvørfinn, faðir mín.”
 One of the dwarf maidens answered, she shone all in gold:
 “The lord who rules this castle is my father Kvørfinn.” 63. Svaraði Sjurður Sigmundarson, ei var drongur ræddur: “Er tín faðir á skógnum burtur, ella er hann heima staddur?” Sjurður Sigmundarson answered, the hero wasn’t afraid:
 “Is your father away in the forest, or is he at home?”
64. “Faðir mín er á skógnum burtur, moyin tekur at telja, “hvørja nátt við risar berjist, málm úr homrum at velja.” “My father is away in the forest,” the maiden starts to tell, “every night he fights with giants, to get ore from the crags.”
65. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson,
 hann sló tað upp í gleim: “Nú skulu vit taka dvørgamoyar og føra til hallar heim!”
 Virgar Valintsson answered,
 he brushes this off with glee: “Now we shall take the dwarf maidens and take them back to the hall!”
66. Svaraði Virgar Valintsson, hann læt síni orð so falla: “Nú skal taka moyar tvær og føra tær heim til halla!”
 Virgar Valintsson answered,
 he let his words fall like this:
 “Now we shall take the two maidens and bring them back to the hall!” 67. Virgar tók tær moyar tvær, setti á Skemming fríða, Sjurður tók tað besta svørð,
 sum dvørgurin hevði smíðað.
 Virgar took the two maidens, he sat them on the handsome Skemmingur, Sjurður took the best sword
 that the dwarf had made.
68. Sjurður tók tað besta svørð,
 sum dvørgurin hevði smíðað,
 síðan allar aðrar brandar støkkir av um miðju.
 Sjurður took the best sword
 that the dwarf had made, then he takes all the other swords and snaps them in the middle.
69. Sjurður tók tað gull og silvur, alt tað, ið Grani bar, síðan skundar hann síni ferð av dvørgaborg avstað.
 Sjurður took the gold and silver, all that Grani could carry, then he hurries on his journey away from the dwarf castle.
70. Ríða teir eftir skógnum fram, teir spara ei fljótar hestar, tá skalv bæði himmal og jørð, og dagurin tók at bresta.
 They ride through the forest, they don’t spare the fast horses, both sky and earth then trembled, and the day started to break.

71. Tað lýsir yvir heidna skóg, sólin tekur at branda,
drekar taka at ýla hátt,
tá ið risar í hallir ganga.
- It shines over the heathen forest,
the sun starts to blaze,
dragons start to howl loudly, when giants go into their halls.
72. Kvørfinn kom av skógnum heim, hann tykist vera komin í vanda, hann sær opnar hallisdýr fyri sær tá standa.
- Kvørfinn came home from the forest,
he suspected danger,
he sees the hall doors standing open before him.
73. Dvørgurin gekk í hallina inn, einki ið hann sigur, hann sær liggja á breiðum borði brandar, av um miðju.
- The dwarf goes into the hall,
he says nothing,
he sees lying on the wide table swords that are snapped in the middle.
74. Kvørfinn gekk í hallina inn, ilt var um at eggja,
sá seg um til moyar tvær, hann kundi tær ikki síggja.
- Kvørfinn goes into the hall,
evil was about to be instigated,
he looked around for the two maidens, he couldn't see them.
75. Dvørgurin leyp um hallargólv, ilt er um at eggja,
kyndi eld í stóru smiðju,
brandar aftur at sleggja.
- The dwarf leapt over the floor of the hall,
evil is about to be instigated, he kindled fire in the great smithy,
to pound swords again.
76. Dvørgurin leyp um hallargólv,
ilt var um at eggja:
"Nú skal ganga at stóran stiðja, brandar aftur at sleggja."
- The dwarf leapt over the floor of the hall,
evil was about to be instigated:
"Now I shall go to the great anvil,
to pound swords again."
77. Dvørgurin leyp um hallargólv, ei var til góðs at bera:
"Hevndar skulu moyar tvær við hørðum sømdum verða."
- The dwarf leapt over the floor of the hall,
it was not good to bear:
"The two maidens shall be avenged with ferocious redress." 78. Sjúrdur og Virgar Valintsson heim í garðin fóru, úti sjálvur Hjalprek kongur fyri teimum stóð.
- Sjúrdur and Virgar Valintsson
went home to the court, King Hjalprek himself stood outside before them.

79. “Ver vælkomin, Sjúrdur, heim av hesari ferð, tú hevur vunnið á heiðinmark gull og búgvíð svørð.”
- “Sjúrdur, welcome
home from this journey, you have won gold and a decorated sword in the heathen forest.”¹³
80. Tá svaraði Hjalprek kongur, mælir fyrri munni á sær: “Hvat er hetta fyrri mikla kempa, ið førir moyar tvær?”
- Then King Hjalprek answered,
saying:
“What kind of mighty warrior is this,
who brings two maidens?”
81. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson
fyrsta orðið tá:
“Hetta er Virgar Valintsson,
Tíðriki kongi frá.
- Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered
the first word then:
“This is Virgar Valintsson,
from King Tíðrikur.
82. Hetta er Virgar Valintsson,
ið førir moyar tvær,
hann hevur verið í hesari ferð á heiðinmark við mær.”
- This is Virgar Valintsson,
who brings two maidens,
he has been on this journey to the heathen forest with me.” 83. Tí svaraði Hjalprek kongur, hann mælir fyrri munni sínum: “Virgar, gakk í hallina inn við dvørgamoyum tínum!”
- King Hjalprek answered that,
saying:
“Virgar, go into the hall with your dwarf maidens!” 84. So var hann av ferðum móður, søgur ganga av,
tríggjar nætur Virgar sterki hjá Hjalprek kongi svav.
- He was so tired from the journey,
so stories tell,
Virgar the strong slept for three nights at King Hjalprek’s.
85. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin skein so víða,
Virgar klæðist for síni song, hann favnar moyar fríðar.
- Early in the morning,
the sun shone so widely,
Virgar dressed himself before his bed, he embraces the beautiful maidens.
86. Virgar gongur for Hjalprek kong, biður hann dugnað gera: “Læna mær skútu av landi út, moyar um sund at føra!”
- Virgar goes before King Hjalprek, asks him for help:
“Lend me a ship from the land, to take the maidens over the sound!”

13 The two lines are reversed in the Faroese, but we have exchanged them to preserve the sense in the English translation.

87. Tí svaraði Hjalprek kongur: “Skútu skalt tú fá, flyta yvir Singarfjørð
 dvørgamoyar báðar.”
- King Hjalprek answered to that:
 “You shall get a ship to take both dwarf maidens across Singarfjørður.”
88. Tí svaraði Hjalprek kongur: “Skútu læni eg tær,
 flyta yvir Singarfjørð
 dvørgamoyar tvær.”
- King Hjalprek answered to that:
 “I shall lend you a ship, to take two dwarf maidens across Singarfjørður.” 89. Virgar læt av lurni skura eina forgyлта skeið, sigldi yvir Singarfjørð,
 so føgur var tann leið.
- Virgar had a gilded skip, quickly run of the rollers,¹⁴ they sailed over Singarfjørður, the journey was so lovely.
90. Tað var Virgar Valintsson,
 søgur ganga frá,
 flutti moyar á Selgjarland, har læt hann borgir slá.
- It was Virgar Valintsson,
 so stories tell,
 he took the maidens to Selgjarland, where he had castles built.
91. Hann læt gyltar borgir gera, gitið man verða leingi, síðan fór Virgar Valintsson
 aftur for Tíðrik dreingir.
- He had golden castles made, it will be told for a long time, then Virgar Valintsson went back to Tíðrikur’s heroes.
92. Virgar læt á Selgjarlandi gyltar borgir gera,
 setti inni moyar tvær,
 tær skuldu silki bera.
- On Selgjarland Virgar had golden castles made,
 he kept the two maidens there,
 they should wear silk.
93. Setti inni moyar tvær, tær skuldu silki virka,
 síðan fór Virgar Valintsson
 aftur for Tíðrik sterka.
- He kept the two maidens there,
 they should weave silk,
 then Virgar Valintsson went back to the strong Tíðrikur.

14 Lyngbye notes that skura av lurni means the speed at which the ship was pulled on rollers down to the sea. Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 430n87.

THE GIANT OF HÓLMGARÐAR OR THE MOUND GHOST (RISIN Í HÓLMGØRÐUM OR DYSJADÓLGUR)

1. Eg veit eina rímuna, inni hefur ligið leingi,
gjørd um Virgar Valintsson
og fleiri reystar dreingir.

I know a ballad,
it has lain inside me for a long time,
it is about Virgar Valintsson
and many courageous heroes.

*Refrain Fuglin í fjøruni hann eitur már, silkbleikt er húgva hans,
so knept er han[s] hár.
Fuglin í fjøruni.*

*The bird on the beach, it is called a seagull,¹ his hat is pale as silk, his hair is so short.
The bird on the beach.²*

2. Gjørd um Virgar Valintsson, royndur í avreksverki,
hartil Sjúrdá Sigmundarson og snarpan Nornagest.

It is about Virgar Valintsson,
who has performed many great deeds, as well as Sjúrdur Sigmundarson and the brave Nornagestur.

3. Tríggjar eru gøturnar, og ein víkur ífrá,
Virgar gekk á heyggin burtur, sum hans avi lá.

There are three paths,
and one deviates from the others, Virgar went away to the mound, where his grandfather lay.

4. “Vakir tú í heygginum, sæli avi mín?
Hetta er Virgar Valintsson,
fostursonur tín.”

“Are you awake in the mound, my late grandfather?
This is Virgar Valintsson,
your fosterson.”

5. “Tóast tú ert mín fostursonur, og eg tín avi betur,
um enn nú rivna dalar og fjøll, eg fari ikki út í vetur.”

“Although you are my fosterson, and I even your grandfather, even if valleys and mountains split,
I will not go out this winter.”

6. “Vilt tú ikki Miming higar senda mær, við báðum mínum hondum eg bróti upp yvir tær.”

“Won’t you send Miming³
here to me,
I am breaking up the mound above you with both my hands.”⁴

1 The original says már, which means “marten,” which is not a bird. It should likely be más, as for example the refrain appears in Álvur kongur CCF variant F. See Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 394; this is how we have chosen to translate it here.

2 Above is the refrain from variant A. Variants B and D have the Grani bar gullið av heiði refrain. The refrain for variant C is not recorded in CCF.

3 A sword.

4 We have exchanged the lines of the Faroese here to preserve the sense in English, and we have added “the mound” for clarity. It means that Virgar will break up the mound above the dead man to get to the sword.

7. Ikki vildi dysjardólgur heygginn lata bróta, báðum hondum um Miming treiv, hann bað sín son væl njóta.
- The mound-ghost⁵ didn't want the mound to be broken, with both hands grasping Miming, he told his son to enjoy it very much.
8. Mælti Virgar Valintsson, hann Miming fekk í hond: “Hvar veitst tú nú heilivágin mestan vera í land?”
- Virgar Valintsson spoke,
he took Miming in his hand: “Where is the best medicine that you know of in the land?”
9. Tí svaraði dysjardólgur, hevði ligið leingi: “Eg veit nógvan heilivág, men tú vinnur hann einki.
- The mound-ghost answered to that,
he had lain for a long time:
“I know of a lot of medicine,
but you won't win it.
10. Tað er eitt hús í Hólmgarðum, sum liggur til risans son, tað er nú fult av heilivág og ongum øðrum mun.
- There is a house in Hólmgarðar, that is for the giant's son, it is now full of medicine and no other treasure.
11. Men kvittar tú [í] Hólmgarðar á hesum sama heysti, lat hann ikki sita,
tann Fávnisbanan sterka!”
- But if you leave for Hólmgarðar this same autumn, do not let him stay,⁶ the strong Fávnisbani!” 12. Tað var Virgar Valintsson, settist á gangaran reyð, so reið hann á Sjúrdar fund, so snart sum fálkur fleyg.
- It was Virgar Valintsson,
sat himself on the red steed, then he rode to meet Sjúrdur, as quickly as the falcon flies.
13. Mitt í miðjum grasagarði akslar hann sítt skinn,
so gekk hann í høgaloft fyri Sjúrd hin unga inn.
- Right in the middle of the garden he throws his cloak over his shoulders, then he went in to the loft room before the young Sjúrdur.

5 Føroysk-ensk orðabók translates dysjardólgur to be “hill troll,” but it is clearly something approaching more like an Old Norse draugr (an undead person with a body), so we have chosen “mound-ghost.” A Tolkeinesque translation would be “barrow-wight.” See Føroysk-ensk orðabók, s.v. “Dysjardólgur.”

6 This likely means Virgar should not let Sjúrdur stay at home, but rather he should go with him.

14. Kongins hall var skipað væl bæði gul og blá,
næsta manni Hjalprek kongi Sjúrður situr hjá. The king's hall was well-decorated⁷ in both yellow and blue, the man sitting next to King Hjalprekur is Sjúrður.
15. "Statt upp, Sjúrður Sigmundarson, eg krevji teg fyrsta sinni, nógvan veit eg heilivág, um tú ert maður at vinna. "Stand up, Sjúrður Sigmundarson, I make demands of you for the first time,
I know of a lot of medicine,
if you are man enough to win it.
16. Tá mást tú búgva teg bitrum væl og gyrða tín hest við spora, um enn tú hevði havt átjan hundrað, tað kundi honum lítið forðað. Then you must equip yourself well with a sharp sword,⁸ and girth up your horse with spurs, even if you had had eighteen hundred,⁹ it would not hinder him much.
17. Har kunnu lítið svørð á bíta, ei heldur bitrir brandar, átjan alin er jarnstong hvør til allar risans gantar." Swords can do little cutting there, and neither can sharp blades, each iron lance is eighteen ells long that all the giant's warriors¹⁰ have." 18. Riðu so av hallini út við so fáum liði, Virgar og Sjúrður Sigmundarson og Nornagestur hin triði. Then they rode from the hall with such a small company, Virgar and Sjúrður Sigmundarson and the third is Nornagestur.
19. Tað var Virgar Valintsson,
hann heim í garðin fór,
úti Vilkus risans son
fyri honum stóð. It was Virgar Valintsson,
he went home to the court, Vilkus the giant's son stood outside before him.
20. Svaraði Sjúrður Sigmundarson, mælti so for seg:
"Hevur tú nakran heilivág avlops selja mær?" Sjúrður Sigmundarson answered, saying:
"Do you have any surplus medicine to sell to me?"

7 Here we have translated skipað as decorated to account for the golden and blue in the second line of the stanza, although ordinarily the word would mean, for example, "appointed" or "organized."

8 "Sharp sword" is not in the Faroese; it simply says "sharp," so we have added "sword" for clarity.

9 We might assume here that this is eighteen hundred men.

10 The Old Norse word ganti means a dandy or a player, someone who is perhaps conceited and foolish. The Orðkort database acknowledges this definition but glosses ganti as "kiempe," meaning, "giant, warrior." See Fróðskaparsetur Føroya, Orðkort, s.v. "Ganti."

21. “Ongan havi eg heilivág avlopis hjá mær,
hvaðan er hasin mikli maður, Sjúrdur, ið fylgir tær?”
- “I have no surplus medicine with me, where is that mighty man from who travels with you Sjúrdur?” 22. “Hetta man vera maður tá, í okur tekur mun,
hetta var hin, ið risan vá, tann sterki Valintsson.”
- “This must be the man then, that seems to us to make a difference,¹¹ this was the one who slew the giant, the strong Valintsson.” 23. “Hav tú takk, tú segði mær, og eg tað ikki visti,
nú skal brynja út liðið alt, tí eg var tann, ið misti.”
- “You shall have thanks that you told to me, since I didn’t know of it,
I shall now fit the whole company out in armour,
because I was the one who lost.”
24. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin roðar í fjøll,
tá hevði Vílkus, risans son,
brynjað út hundrað øll.
- Early in the morning,
the sun reddens the mountains,
Vilkus, the giant’s son, had then fitted the whole hundred out in armour.
25. Tá hevði Vílkus, risans son,
brynjað út hundrað tólv,
Sjúrdur og Virgar Valintsson
teir riðu har tveir ímót.
- Vilkus, the giant’s son, had then fitted twelve hundred out in armour; Sjúrdur and Virgar Valintsson,
the two rode against them there.
26. Bardust fullar tógva dagar, duplur hanga við stengur, møddist Virgar Valintsson,
í blóði har hann stendur.
- They fought for fully two days, foam hangs from the horses’ bits,¹² Virgar Valintsson got tired, as he stands there in blood.
27. Harra Gud í himmiríki, mikil er tín makt,
so var Virgar í víggi staddur, opin fell hann aftur.
- Lord God in heaven,
your power is mighty,
Virgar was in the battle like that,
he fell backwards with his arms spread out.¹³

11 It is difficult to understand what this line means, and here we have therefore used the reading from variant B of the ballad sum okkum tykir í mun. Grundtvig and Bloch, Føroya kvæði, vol. 1, p. 315, st. 37. Í and ið sound the same (and ið and sum can be used synonymously), and tekur and tykir do not sound very different 12 This is the interpretation in Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 385n40. The horses are foaming at the mouth.

13 In Faroese it literally says he fell backwards “open,” that is with his arms spread

28. Tað var hin snarpi Nornagestur, It was the brave Nornagestur, brandin undir hann skeyt, he thrust the sword under him, tók hann Virgar Valintsson, he took Virgar Valintsson, hann bar hann burt av breyt. he carried him away off the path.
29. Sjúrdur gjørdist í høggunum tungur, Sjúrdur became heavy in his blows, øllum tókti undur, everyone thought it a marvel, avleiðis gekk hann risans rekkar, he drove the giant's warriors from their path, trongdi teir miðjan sundur. he pushed them apart in the middle.¹⁴
30. Sjúrdur gjørdist í høggunum tungur, Sjúrdur became heavy in his blows, tað mundu flest øll síggja, almost everyone might see that, avleiðis gekk hann risans menn, he drove the giant's men from their path, trongdi teir sundur í níggju. he pushed them apart into nine groups.¹⁵ 31. Virgar liggur undir heygjunum, Virgar lies by the mound, tóktist líða mein, he seemed to suffer an injury, at hin snarpi Sjúrdur so that the brave Sjúrdur hann skuldi berjast ein. had to fight alone.
32. Virgar leyp undan heygjunum, Virgar leapt up from the mound, sum skeinur hevði fingið, he who had received scratches,¹⁶ báðum hondum um Miming treiv, he grasped Miming with both hands, hann ruddi fyri sær geingi. he cut a path through the fighting throng.
33. So bardust teir frændur báðir The two friends both fought like that víðar vøllir fram, through the wide battlefields, eftir stóð Vilkus risans son Vilkus the giant's son was left við sín triðja mann. with his third man.
34. Tað var Vilkus risans son, It was Vilkus the giant's son, hann kreypt undur borgarlið: he crept under the castle gate:
"Kæri Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, "Dear Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, gev tú mær nú grið!" have mercy on me now!"

out open, spreadeagled in a vulnerable position.

14 He is pressing the army back.

15 He is pressing the army back and splitting it up.

16 This can also mean slashes, but it does not imply a significant injury.

35. Mælti Sjúrdur Sigmundarson nú so fyrri seg: “Gjarna gevi eg tær grið og frið, um tú kannst skjóla teg.”
- Sjúrdur Sigmundarson spoke like this:
“I will gladly give you mercy and peace, if you can hide yourself.”
36. Tað var Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, hann vendi honum ífrá,
tá kom Virgar Valintsson,
hann hjó hann í lutir tvá.
- It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
he turned away from him, then Virgar Valintsson came,
he chopped him in two pieces.
37. Mælti Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, hyggi[n] fyrri seg: “Eg havi vunnið tann heilivág, men takka mást tú meg!”
- Sjúrdur Sigmundarson spoke
prudently:
“I have won that medicine, but you must thank me!”
38. Mælti Virgar Valintsson,
varð honum so fyrri munn: “Sjúrdur, tak mót heilivág, tú ert tann, hann hevur vunnið!”
- Virgar Valintsson spoke,
it came out of his mouth like this:
“Sjúrdur, accept the medicine, you are the one who has won!” 39. Virgar førði burt heilivág á gangarum tvá, síðani hevði Sjúrdur á Hólmgørðum ráð.
- Virgar took away the medicine
on two steeds, since then Sjúrdur
ruled in Hólmgarðar.
40. Virgar førði burt heilivág á tveimum gangarum sínum, men Sjúrdur ráddi fyrri Hólmgørðum,
tað vil eg fyrri øllum tína.
- Virgar took away the medicine
on his two steeds, but Sjúrdur ruled over Hólmgarðar
I will tell everyone about it.

THE GIANT OF LEITTRABERG (RISIN AV LEITTRABERGI)

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1. Eg veit eina rímuna,
inni hefur ligið leingi,
risin liggur á Leittrabergi,
talar við sínar dreingir. | I know a ballad,
it has lain inside me for a long time,
the giant lies on Leittraberg, and speaks with his heroes. |
| 2. Risin talar við sínar dreingir, gott er at taka til evna: “Hvar vita tit mín faðirs bana?
Nú lystir meg hann at hevna.” | The giant speaks with his heroes, it’s good to get started on the subject: ¹ “Do you know where my father’s killer is?
Now I desire to avenge him.” |
| 3. Allir drýptu hævdið niður, eingin tordi tala
uttan hansara hævudsmaður,
betri hevði hann tagað. | All of them hung their heads, no one dared to speak except for his leader, ² it would have been better if he had kept silent. |
| 4. “Hoyr tú, frægi Filkussonur,
siga skalt tú mær,
ið hvør var mín faðirs bani?
Ella havi eg hævdið av tær.” | “Listen, brave Filkussonur, you shall tell me,
who was my father’s killer?
Or I will have your head.” |
| 5. Tað var frægi Filkussonur, tá tagdi hann so leingi: “Um enn eg sigi tín faðirs bana,
á honum vinnur tú einki.” | It was the brave Filkussonur, he was silent for so long: “Even if I name your father’s killer, you won’t win against him.” |
| 6. “Hoyr tú, frægi Filkussonur,
sig mær satt ífrá:
hvussu var hann á navni nevndur,
ið mín faðir vá?” | “Listen, brave Filkussonur,
tell me truthfully:
what is he named,
he who slew my father?” |
| 7. Svaraði frægi Filkussonur, tykir í tí mun:
“So er hann á navni nevndur, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson.” | The brave Filkussonur answered, he thinks there might be riches in it: “He is named thusly:
Sjúrdur Sigmundarson.” |

1 As in, it is good to get started on the subject of the ballad.

2 This must be the leader of the heroes.

8. Tað var risin á Leittrabergi, læt síni orð so snúgva: “Hoyr tú, frægi Filkussonur, hvar man Sjúrdur búgva?”
- It was the giant on Leittraberg,
he began to speak: “Listen, brave Filkussonur, where does Sjúrdur live?”
9. Svaraði frægi Filkussonur við trega og tungum vanda: “Hann býr sær í Hólmgarðum í Noregis landi.
- The brave Filkussonur answered with sorrow and heavy grief:
“He lives in Hólmgarðar in the land of Norway.
10. Hann hefur mangan risan dripið fyri sítt hvassa svørð, kemur tú fyri Hólmgarðar, tílfka rakar tú ferð.”
- He has killed many giants with his sharp sword,
if you come to Hólmgarðar, your journey will end in the same way.” 11. Tað var risin á Leittrabergi, letur á vreiði renna: “Fyri tú spottar og happar meg, tú skalt á báli brenna.”
- It was the giant on Leittraberg,
he vented his anger:
“Because you mock and harrass me, you shall burn on a bonfire.” 12. “Um tú letur meg steikja, um tú letur meg brenna, Sjúrdur verður ikki tín fangi, tað fært tú at kenna.”
- “If you will have me roasted,
if you will have me burnt, Sjúrdur won’t be your prisoner, you will find that out.”
13. Svaraði frægi Filkussonur, klæddur í brynju nýggja: “Sjúrdur verður ei tín fangi, tað fært tú at síggja.”
- The brave Filkussonur answered, dressed in new armour: “Sjúrdur will not be your prisoner, you shall see.”
14. Risin fór sær haðan burtur við teirri somu ferð, so fór hann í smiðjuna
at smíða sær skjöld og svørð.
- The giant went from there in the same way,³ then he went into the smithy to forge a shield and a sword for himself.
15. Risin smíðar jarnstongina, ógvuligt at líta,
átjan alin var hon long,
hon glógvar sum silvurið hvíta.
- The giant hammers the iron lance, dreadful to see,
it was eighteen ells long,
it shines like white silver.

3 Literally “at the same speed.”

16. So letur risin av Leittrabergi síni skipini gera,
allar letur hann streingirnar av reyðargulli vera. Then the giant of Leittraberg has his ships be made,
he has all of the ropes be made of red gold.
17. So letur risin av Leittrabergi síni skipini búgva,
allar letur hann streingirnar
av reyðargulli snúgva. Then the giant of Leittraberg has his ships be readied,
he has all of the ropes be twisted out of red gold.
18. Risin gekk til strandar oman, fróur í huga full,
hann laðar í sín forgyлта knørr væl tjúgu tunnur gull. The giant went down to the beach, happy,
he loads his gilded ship with about twenty barrels of gold.
19. Risin gekk til strandar oman, búðist ei við frið,
Torkil við Strond og Tórir á Grund teir fóru honum við. The giant went down to the beach, he readied himself for battle,⁴ Torkil við Strond and Tórir á Grund went with him.
20. Risin gekk til strandar oman,
søgur ganga av,
hann stígur í sín forgyлта knørr, so stokkurin gekk í kav. The giant went down to the beach,
so stories tell,
he steps into his gilded ship, so that the gunwale went under the sea.⁵ 21. Vindur upp síni silkisegl, gull við ráum brann,
strykar ei á bunkan niður fyrr enn við Noregis land. He hoists his silken sails, gold shone by the yards,⁶ he doesn't lower the sails⁷ before they were in Norway.

4 This literally means “he readied himself not for peace,” as in he is preparing for battle. It is also slightly ambiguous because it could also mean that he is not peaceful in himself, either.

5 The image here is that the giant is so heavy that when he steps on board his ship, the top of the hull goes underwater.

6 A yard is a wooden beam to which the sails are tied. In the line, it literally says that the gold “burnt,” as in shined brightly.

7 This literally means that he did not strike the sails down onto the deck.

22. Vindur upp síni silkisegl,
so er greitt fyri mæ, r,
strykar ei á bunkan niður fyrr enn við Hólmgarður.⁸
- He hoists his silken sails,
so I've been told,
doesn't lower them before they were by Hólmgarður.⁸ 23. Smalasvein í líðini situr, goymir at smalu og geit:
"Eg sær skip eftir havi koma, havnir vilja leita."
- The shepherd sits on the hillside, herds the sheep and goats:
"I see ships come over the sea, they are looking for harbours." 24. Allar rekur hann smalurnar saman á grønna vøll,
síðan akslar hann kápu blá,
hann gár í kongins høll.
- He drives all the sheep together on a green field, then he throws a blue cloak round his shoulders,
he goes into the king's hall.
25. Síðan akslar hann kápu blá,
hann gár í kongins høll:
"Eg eri mæ av einum luti
vísari, enn tær eruð øll.
- Then he throws a blue cape round his shoulders,
he goes into the king's hall:
"I'm a bit
wiser than they all are.
26. Eg eri mæ av einum luti
vísari, enn tær eruð øll, eg síggi skip eftir havi koma, seglini hvít sum mjøll."
- I'm a bit
wiser than they all are,
I see ships come over the sea,
the sails are white as snow." 27. "Sært tú skip eftir havi koma,
seglini hvít sum lín,
vera man risin á Leittrabergi, at hevna faðir sín."
- "Do you see ships come over the sea,
the sails white as linen,
of course the giant of Leittraberg has come to avenge his father." 28. Tí svaraði smalasveinur, fyri breiða borði stóð:
"Tykti mæ, at ein grimmur risi fram eftir bunkan fór."
- To that the shepherd answered, he stood before the wide table:
"It seemed to me that an ugly giant walked forward across the deck."
29. Tað var Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, tók tey orð í geyma:
"Undarligt hevur fyri mæ borist hesa nátt í dreyma.
- It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
he paid attention to those words:
"A strange thing appeared before me last night in dreams.

⁸ Here "Holmgarður" is in the singular, elsewhere it is "Holmgarðar" in the plural.

30. Meg droymdi, at Grani úti saðlaður stóð,
meg droymdi, at fyri honum rann so mikið blóð. I dreamt that Grani stood saddled outside,
I dreamt that so much blood ran in front of him.
31. Meg droymdi, at spjótið mítt fell frá mínum belti,
meg droymdi, at mítt góða svørð á blonkum brynjum gelti. I dreamt that my spear fell from my belt,
I dreamt that my good sword
rung on shining armour.
32. Meg droymdi, at hjálmurinn í mínum hondum var,
meg droymdi, at mítt góða svørð ígjøgnum risar skar.” I dreamt that the helmet was in my hands,
I dreamt that my good sword
cut through giants.” 33. Føgur var tann snekkjan, hon kendi fagurt land,
læt hann síni akker falla
á tann hvíta sand. That ship was beautiful, it touched the beautiful land, he had his anchor lowered down onto the white beach.
34. Læt hann síni akker falla
á tann hvíta sand,
fyrstur steig risin á Leittrabergi sínnum fótum á land. He lowered his anchors down onto the white sand, the giant of Leittraberg was the first to go ashore.
35. Fyrstur steig risin á Leittrabergi
sínnum fótum á land,
og hann hin frægi Filkússonur undir hans høgru hond. The giant of Leittraberg was the first to go ashore,
and he, the brave Filkússonur, at his right hand side.
36. Gingu teir frá strondum niðan, ríkir menn og reystir,
lunnar brustu, og jørðin skalv, teir drógu sín knørr í neystið. They went up from the beach, rich and powerful men,
the rollers⁹ banged and the ground shook, they dragged their ship into the boathouse.
37. Sjúrdur stendur í glasglugga, kann væl randir rjóða: “Nú skal ein til strandar oman, risanum frið at bjóða.” Sjúrdur stands in the window, well able to redden shields: “Now one man shall go down to the beach, to offer the giant peace.”¹⁰

9 The rollers are the rollers the ship is being moved on (despite it previously having been anchored).

10 This closing quotation mark is not in the edition and has been added by us.

38. Sig, Sjúrdur býður teim øllum heim, gláður for uttan ekka,
sita yvir tað breiða borð, tann brúna mjøð at drekka. Say, Sjúrdur invites them all home, happy without worry,
to sit by the wide table,
to drink the brown mead.
39. Sjúrdur býður teim øllum heim, meiri av monnum og minna,
um teir vilja halda frið og ongar neisur vinna. Sjúrdur invites them all home, higher and lower status men,¹¹ if they will keep the peace
and do no dirty tricks.
40. “Um teir vilja halda frið
og ongar neisur vinna,
men verður oss nakað vanboðið, so mæli eg um minna.” “If they will keep the peace¹²
and do no dirty tricks,
but if any do us an injustice,
then I will remember it.” 41. Risin og allir hansara menn ganga á hvítum sandi, tað er hann Sjúrdar sendisvein, ríður niður til strandar. The giant and all his men walk on the white sand, it is Sjúrdur’s messenger, who rides down to the beach.
42. “Sjúrdur býður tykkum øllum heim,
gláðir foruttan ekka,
sita yvir hans breiða borð, tann brúna mjøð at drekka. “Sjúrdur invites you all home,
happy without worry,
to sit by his wide table, to drink the brown mead.¹³ 43. Sjúrdur býður øllum heim, meiri av monnum og minna,
um tær vilja halda frið og ongar neisur vinna. Sjúrdur invites everyone home, higher and lower status men,
if they will keep the peace
and do no dirty tricks.
44. Um tær vilja halda frið
og ongar neisur vinna,
men verður oss nakað vanboðið, so mælir hann um minna.” If they will keep the peace
and do no dirty tricks,
but if any do us an injustice,
then he’ll remember it.”

11 Lyngbye, however, translates this as “hver mand med bedre sinde” (each man with a better mind) and a footnote saying “Flere eller færre af mændene” (more or fewer of the men), so it is unclear here exactly how he interprets the line. Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 449.

12 The opening quotation mark is not in the edition and has been added by us.

13 This and the following stanzas recall stt. 38–40.

45. Risin gekk frá strondum niðan, niðan frá sínum liði,
tekur hann Sjúrdar sendisvein, hann beit hann av um miðju. The giant went up from the beach, up from his band,
he takes Sjúrdur's messenger,
he bites him off at the waist.
46. Beit hann hann í miðju sundur, søgur ganga frá.
Sjúrdur stóð í glaslugga, fullgjølla hann tað sá. He bit him apart at the waist,
so stories tell,
Sjúrdur stood in the window,
he saw it clearly.
47. Sjúrdur býður sínar menn gyrða seg við svørð:
"Tað síggi eg á risanum, at nú er ilt á ferð." Sjúrdur tells his men to gird themselves with swords:
"I see it on the giant, that evil is afoot now." 48. Sjúrdur biður sínar menn klæða seg í brynjur góðar, ikki óttast risans her, hóast hann sýnist stórir. Sjúrdur asks his men to dress themselves in good armour, to not fear the giant's army, even though it seems large.
49. Sjúrdur biður sínar menn klæðast í brynju bjarta, standa nú so manniliga, ikki hava kálvahjarta.¹⁴ Sjúrdur asks his men to put on bright armour, to stand like men now,
to not be cowards.
50. Sjúrdur bindur sítt hjálmaband, Gestur stóð honum næst, ongantíð á ævini
bant hann tað so fast. Sjúrdur fastens his helmet strap, Gestur stood next to him,¹⁵ never in his life
had he fastened it so tightly.
51. Mitt í miðjum grasgarði akslar risin sítt skinn,
og so búgvín gongur hann
í høggar hallir inn. In the middle of the garden the giant throws his fur cloak around his shoulders,
and thus prepared he goes into the high halls.
52. Og so búgvín gongur hann
í høggar hallir inn,
sum Sjúrdur frægi á borði situr við *manna hundrað fimm. And thus prepared he goes into the high halls,
as the brave Sjúrdur sits by the table with five hundred men.

14 This literally means "don't have a calf's heart," meaning to be brave.

15 Gestur is Nornagestur.

53. “Ver vælkomin, risin, higar nú til mín,
drekki nú, hvat tær betur líkar, mjøðin ella vín!”
- “Giant, welcome
here to my place,
now drink what you like better, the mead or wine!” 54. “Lítið er mæi um mjøðin tín, hálvtt væl minni um vín, eg havi ongar bötur fingið fyri sæla faðir mín.”
- “Little do I like your mead, and half less again I like your wine, I have received no reparations for my late father.”
55. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
fell so væl í lag:
“Hevur tú ongar bötur fingið, ongar fært tú í dag.”
- Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered,
it turned out so well:¹⁶ “If you have received no reparations, you will receive none today.” 56. Risin gekk at borðinum, reiggjar nevan hátt, Sjúrdur situr í hásæti, hann bar seg undan brátt.
- The giant went to the table, swings the fist high,
Sjúrdur sits in the high seat,
he quickly dodges it.
57. Risin gekk at breiðum borði, illsku ætlar at prøva, knýtir hann neva við miklum alvi, Sjúrða á nasar at geva.
- The giant went to the wide table, intending to do evil,
he clenches his fist with great strength, to give Sjúrdur a punch on the nose.
58. Tekur hann hendur um Sjúrdar háls, hann eftir hári at draga, ikki vikaðist kappin reysti, heldur enn í berg hevði staðið.
- He puts his hands around Sjúrdur’s throat, he drags him by the hair, the bold hero didn’t budge anymore than if he’d been a cliff.
59. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, her yppist ein nýggjur siður: “Tað hevur eingin roynt uttan tú, meg eftir hári at drigið.”
- Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered, here a new custom was established: “No one but you has tried to drag me by the hair.” 60. Sjúrdur leyp úr hásæti, er mæi ei á tí hól,
bæði borð og borðstól
tað førði hann fram á gólv.
- Sjúrdur leapt from the high seat, it is not boasting,
both table and trestles¹⁷
he upended onto the floor.

16 The narrator here thinks that Sjúrdur’s answer is clever and well put.

17 This seems to mean a type of trestle table, where the top of the table is supported by trestles. Lyngbye translates borðstólur as chair, and has Sjúrdur tipping over tables and chairs, but borðstólur means table leg, not chair. Lyngbye, Færøiske Qvæder, 459.

61. Sjúrdur brá sínum bitra brandi, eg geri tað ei at loyna, ætlaði risanum banasár,
og odd í hjálmi at royna.
- Sjúrdur brandished his sharp sword,
I do not hide it,
he intended to mortally wound the giant, and to test the point of the sword in his helmet.¹⁸
62. Sjúrdur brá sínum bitra brandi,
søgur ganga frá,
oddin barst í silvurbjálka, ikki beit stálið á.
- Sjúrdur brandished his sharp sword,
so stories tell,
the point struck into the silver beam,
the steel didn't bite.
63. Allir sótu Sjúrdar menn, sum gyrdir vóru við svørð, vistu ikki, hvar ið teir vóru, himli ella á jørð.
- All of Sjúrdur's men sat, who were girded with swords, didn't know where they were,
in heaven or on earth.
64. Teir høgga títt, teir líva lítt, tá var brak í høll, øvigan bardi hann risan tá út á grønan vøll.
- They hew fast, they spare little,
there was a crash in the hall, he then struck the giant backwards¹⁹ out onto the green field.
65. "Eg fór mæ av Leittrabergi, búðist ei við frið.
Sjúrdur, kom av hallini út, tú brynja út alt títt lið!"
- "I came from Leittraberg,
I readied myself for battle,²⁰ Sjúrdur, come out of the hall, equip all your troops!"
66. Árla var um morgunin,
sólin roðar í fjøll,
tá hevði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson
brynjað út hundrað øll.
- Early in the morning,
the sun reddens the mountains,
then Sjúrdur Sigmundarson had equipped all one hundred of them.
67. Tá hevði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson
brynjað út hundrað øll, teir løgdu sínum bardøgum so skamt frá kongins høll.
- Then Sjúrdur Sigmundarson had
equipped all one hundred of them, they had their battles
so close to the king's hall.

18 This literally says "to test the point," meaning the point of the sword, i.e., to fight the giant with the sword.

19 The idea here is that he hits the giant making him go backwards.

20 This literally says he did not prepare himself for peace.

68. Teir lögdu sínum bardögum eftir hvössum gróti,
tað var risin á Leittrabergi,
hann ríður har ímóti.
- They had their battles
by sharp rocks,
it was the giant of Leittraberg,
he rides against them there.
69. Tað er risin á Leittrabergi, hann ríður har ímóti,
búkar fullu á jørðina,
sum teir kasta gróti.
- It is the giant of Leittraberg,
he rides against them there,
guts fell onto the ground, as they throw rocks.²¹ 70. So ríður frægi Filkússonur víðan vøllin fram, klývur hann hvønn um tvørar herðar,
móti honum rann.
- The brave Filkússonur then rides forth on the wide field, he splits every man crosswise through the shoulders
who ran against him.
71. Sjúrdur sjálvur talar tá til snarpa Nornagest: “Tú saðla mær nú Grana, mín góða gangarahest!”
- Sjúrdur himself then speaks to the brave Nornagestur: “Saddle Grani for me now, my good steed!”
72. Sjúrdur ríður í stríðið fram, royndi góðar gripir,
niður feldi hann risans menn,
tíggju fyri hvørja sipan.
- Sjúrdur rides into the battle, uses good arms,
he felled the giant’s men,
ten with every blow.
73. So ríður hann Filkússonur, hefur ei handahón,
klývur hann hvønn um
tvørar herðar,
varpar út á sjó.
- Filkússonur then rides, without any skill,
he splits each across their shoulders, throws them out to sea.
74. Sjúrdur tokar í herin fram, av bar barnagaman,
møtir honum frægur Filkússonur,
nú bar báðum saman.
- Sjúrdur advanced through the army,
with sheer childish joy,
the valiant Filkússonur meets him,
now they both clashed.
75. Møtir honum frægur Filkússonur, ógvuligt at líta,
hann var allur í jarni klæddur, einki svørð kann bíta.
- He meets the brave Filkússonur,
terrible to behold,
he was dressed all in iron,
that no sword can bite.

21 This is ambiguous: it could also mean “as if they throw rocks.”

76. Teir høgga títt, teir líva lítt,
av bar barnagaman,
eldur dreiv úr svørðunum, tá ið oddar bóru saman. They chop fast and spare little,
with sheer childish joy,
fire sparked from the swords,
when the points clashed.
77. Teir høgga títt, teir líva lítt, teir troða jørð til kálva,
dvørgamál sang í hvørjum hamri, vørlidin tók at skelva. They chop often and spare little,
they wade in mud up to the ankles,
it echoed from every crag,
the world started to shake.
78. Sjúrdur høgdi ógvuliga, mangt var honum til meina, ikki beit svørð á heysi hans, heldur enn knívur á hørðum steini. Sjúrdur chopped dreadfully, much was meant to harm to him, swords didn't bite on his head, rather like a knife on hard stone.
79. Tað var Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, høgdi nú til so fast, heysurin á Filkusson forinnan hjálmin brast. It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, he now chopped so hard,
the head of Filkussonur burst within the helmet.
80. Tað var Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, sínum svørði brá,
hann kleyv frægan Filkusson sundur í lutir tvá. It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson,
he brandished his sword,
he split the valiant Filkussonur
into two pieces.
81. Tað var Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, seg tilbaka sá,
alt var fallið liðið hans, tað livdu ganska fá. It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, he looked behind himself,
all of his army had fallen,
very few lived.
82. Sjúrdur tokar í herin fram, ei var barnagaman,
møtir hann risan á Leittrabergi, nú bar báðum saman. Sjúrdur advances through the army, there was no childish joy, he meets the giant of Leittraberg,
now they both clashed.
83. Sjúrdur tokar í herin fram,
royndi góðar gripir,
niður feldi hann risans menn, tíggju fyri hvørja sipan. Sjúrdur advances through the army,
he uses good arms,
he felled the giant's men,
ten with every blow.
84. Risin reiggjar jarnstongini ógvuliga fast,
Grani skákaði undan honum, hann misti fyrsta kast. The giant swings the iron lance very²² hard,
Grani twisted away from him,
he lost the first throw.

22 Ógvuliga is misspelt ógvulía in CCF.

85. Risin reiggjar jarnstongini, kundi væl tann list,
Grani skákaði undan honum,
tað annað slagid hann misti.
- The giant swings the iron lance,
he knew that art well,
Grani twisted away from him,
he missed the second blow.
86. Risin reiggjar jarnstongini
ógvuliga fast,
stongin kom í jørðina,
í tríggjar lutir brast.
- The giant swings the iron lance very hard,
the lance hit the earth,
and broke into three pieces.
87. Tað var risin á Leittrabergi, fór eftir grønari jørð aftur í sítt góða skip at søkja sær skjöld og svørð.
- It was the giant of Leittraberg, he went over green earth back to his good ship
to seek a shield and sword for himself.
88. Tað var risin á Leittrabergi, fírrar ei sínnum lívi, átjan alin í hvørt lop
har aftur av skipi.
- It was the giant of Leittraberg,
he doesn't fear for his life, eighteen ells in every leap back from the ship.
89. “Hoyr tú, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, tó tú kannst væl at ríða, nú skalt tú koma fyri tann, ið teg skal læra at stríða.”
- “Listen, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, though you know how to ride well, now you shall come before the one who will teach you how to fight.” 90. Teir høgga títt, teir líva lítt, dvørgamál sang í fjøllum: “Betri var mær inni at ligið enn berjast móti trøllum.”
- They chop fast and spare little,
it echoed²³ in the mountains: “It would have been better for me to lie inside than to fight against trolls.” 91. Gestur hann stóð honum næst, vildi ikki undan flýggja, setir hann niður á Sjúrdar høvur trinnar hjálmur nýggjar.
- Gestur stood next to him,
he didn't want to flee,
he puts on Sjúrdur's head three new helmets.²⁴ 92. Tað var risin av Leittrabergi, vildi ei undan flýggja, høggur hann niður av Sjúrdar høvdi
trinnar hjálmur nýggjar.
- It was the giant of Leittraberg,
he didn't want to flee,
he chops down from Sjúrdur's head three new helmets.

23 Dvørgamál literally means “dwarf speech” or “dwarf language,” but it actually means “echo” in Faroese.

24 This is a comic moment in the ballad.

93. Sjúrdur bindur upp hjálmin tann, skein sum gullið reyða, tann hann fekk frá dvørgamoynni eftir tann Dagmars deyða. Sjúrdur fastens on that helmet, that shone like red gold,
the one he got from the dwarf maiden after Dagmar's death.
94. Gestur hann stóð honum næst,
ógvuligt á at líta:
"Høgg nú, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, nú man einki á bíta!" Gestur stood next to him, it was terrible to see:
"Strike now, Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, now nothing may bite you!" 95. Teir høgga títt, teir líva lítt,
teir troða jørð til kálva,
dvørgamál sang í hvørjum hamri, vørlidin tók at skelva. They chop often and spare little,
they wade in mud up to the ankles,
it echoed in every crag,
the world started to shake.
96. Svaraði Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, letur so orðum lúka:
"Nú er at taka upp listir tær, ið eg havi sjáldan brúkað." Sjúrdur Sigmundarson answered, concludes with these words:
"Now to start using those stratagems that I have seldom used."
97. Tað var Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, kundi væl tann list,
snarliga vendi hann Grana burtur til at ríða dyst. It was Sjúrdur Sigmundarson, he knew that stratagem well, quickly he turned Grani away to ride to joust.
98. Sjúrdur reið tann fyrsta dyst, stakk hann inn at beini, ikki beit tá svørðið á heldur enn knívur á hørðum steini. Sjúrdur rode for the first joust, he thrust into the bone,
the sword didn't bite then,
rather like knife on hard stone.
99. Sjúrdur reið tann annan dyst, stakk hann inn at hjarta, eitur dreiv í himmalin upp, tá sortnaði sólin bjarta. Sjúrdur rode for the second joust, he thrust into his heart, poison spurted up into the sky, then the bright sun darkened.²⁵ 100. Sjúrdur reið tann triðja dyst, øllum tykti undur,
høggur hann risan á Leittrabergi av í kníggjum sundur. Sjúrdur rode for the third joust, everyone thought it a wonder, he chops the giant of Leittraberg apart at the knees.

25 The giant's blood has blocked the sunlight.

101. Høggur hann risan á Leittrabergi He chops the giant of Leittraberg av í kníggjum tá: off at the knees then:
“Ligg nú her á grønum vølli “Now lie here on the green field Filkussoni hjá!” by Filkussonur!” 102. Sjúrdur vendi Grana aftur Sjúrdur turned Grani back

26 A táttur is a section or division of a ballad, as discussed in the introductory essay.

SUMMARIES OF THE BALLADS

HELEN F. LESLIE-JACOBSEN

Regin the Smith (Regin smiður)

(1)¹ The singer opens the ballad by declaring he will sing about mighty kings. (2–3) Sigmundur and Hjördis get married and celebrate with a feast at Christmas. (4–8) Soon, however, war descends on the land, the men go into battle and Sigmundur is fatally wounded. (9–24) Hjördis goes to the battlefield to find him, and as Sigmundur dies, he recounts the battle and foretells she will have a boy and she is to give him the name Sjúrdur. He gives her the pieces of his broken sword and tells her the boy must avenge his death and that Regin the smith must forge a new sword from the pieces. He mentions that the dragon Frænar lies on Glitrarheiði and that Regin is loyal to few. Sigmundur then finally dies. (25–26) Hjördis leaves crying, and King Hjalprek visits her. (27–33) Hjördis gives birth to a boy and names him Sjúrdur, has him baptized, and takes great care of him. (34–35) Hjördis then marries Hjalprek. (36–42) Sjúrdur grows up with his mother in Hjalprek's kingdom (who fosters him), growing extremely fast and becomes very strong, until he was able to give heavy blows to the king's men. (43–51) He kills some of the king's men and eventually the boys tire of being beaten and tell him it would be better to avenge his father than to beat them. Sjúrdur then goes to his mother and demands to know about his father and what had happened to him. She informs him that the sons of Hundingur killed Sigmundur, but she doesn't have much hope that he will manage to take revenge. (52–60) Sjúrdur rebuffs his mother, saying young dogs often have sharp teeth, and Hjördis gives him the sword pieces, showing him Sigmundur's blood-drenched clothing. She instructs him to visit Regin to get a new sword forged from the pieces, and echoes Sigmundur by mentioning the dragon Frænar on Glitrarheiði and that Regin is loyal to few again. (61–64) Sjúrdur asks for his mother's help in getting a horse, and she advises him to throw a rock in the river and to pick the horse that doesn't run away. He does so and picks the horse Grani. (65–72) Sjúrdur goes to find Regin and asks him to forge a sword from the two pieces from Sigmundur. (73–79) Regin only works on the sword one night, and when Sjúrdur returns to try it, it breaks into two pieces. (80–87) Sjúrdur threatens to kill Regin if he doesn't make a better sword, and Regin says he will do so if he can have the heart of the dragon. (88–97) Regin now works on the sword for thirty nights, and when Sjúrdur returns to try it, the sword is so good that when he tries it, Sjúrdur splits the anvil apart and the block underneath. He calls the sword Gramm. (98–104) Regin wants to come with him to Glitrarheiði but first Sjúrdur avenges his father by killing the sons of Hundingur. (105–15) After Sjúrdur has ridden through the forest, an old man joins him on a beach, it is Nornagestur. Nornagestur asks who is with Sjúrdur, and when Sjúrdur explains it is Regin the smith, who is also the dragon's brother, Nornagestur tells Sjúrdur that Regin intends for him to die by giving him poor advice on how many trenches to dig to avoid the dragon's poison, and explains how to circumvent this. (116–19) Sjúrdur prepares himself and the dragon has left the gold and is lying under a waterfall. (120–28) Sjúrdur attacks the dragon and the foundations of the world tremble. As the dragon dies, it converses with Sjúrdur, asking who he is. Sjúrdur identifies himself, the dragon asks who came with him and advises him to kill Regin, since the dragon knows he will kill Sjúrdur. (129–35) Sjúrdur roasts the heart of the dragon, he burns his hands, and sticks his hands in his mouth and can understand the language of birds and animals.² The birds tell him to eat the heart himself rather than give it to Regin, and Regin lies down to drink the dragon blood, and Sjúrdur kills him. (136–41) Sjúrdur gets a large amount of gold and straps twelve chests to Grani's back and mounts him (displeasing the horse). Grani leaps over a river and the buckle bursts, and Nornagestur gets the buckle. (142) The narrator ends the ballad.

I Numbers in parentheses correspond to stanzas in the ballads being referenced.

The Ballad of Brynhild (Brynhildar táttur)

(1–3) The narrator begins the ballad and tells about King Buðlin, who goes into his daughter's hall. (4–13) His daughter, Brynhild, sits on Hildarfjall on her throne, combing her hair and rejecting suitors. Her father comes in and demands that she stop refusing men. (14–26) She tells her father that Sjúrdur is the only man she will accept, her father points out she has never seen him and she replies that the norns have decreed this. Buðlin asks how Sjúrdur is better than other men, and she lists his exploits, including slaying the dragon Frænir. (27–34) Buðlin asks how they will get Sjúrdur to come to them, and Brynhild asks for a hall surrounded by a wall of fire to be conjured

² It is not explicitly stated in the ballad, but in Old Norse tradition it is consuming the blood of the dragon by sucking his burnt hands after he prods the heart to see whether it is done that allows him to understand the speech of birds.

up by dwarves, that only Sjúrdur can ride through, which is done. (35) An interjection describing how many men have lost their lives for women. (36–46) Noble men ride to Buðli's hall,³ King Gunnar arrives and Buðli tells Brynhild she must accept him. She hurries away to Hildarheygur, her mound (on which her hall stands). Grímur and Høgnar fight. (47–60) Brynhild, sitting on her throne, draws Sjúrdur to her. He rides out and the birds tell him she is expecting him. Dressed in gold gloves and gold rings, he leaves for Buðli's land, riding the unequalled horse Grani. (61–69) Sjúrdur rides down by Júki's court on the way, and Grimhild, curious about where he is going, stands outside and tries to stop him, as she has a daughter who wants to marry him. He says he must keep going to the wall of fire. He gets dressed and says he has an errand to go there. (70–81) No one dares to cross the wall of fire to win Brynhild; Grímur turns back. (73–97) Sjúrdur is the only one who manages to ride onto Brynhilduheygur. Grani's hooves thunder as he leaps over and the fire burns around them, they reach a golden gate and Sjúrdur chops down the door with his sword. He then splits off the latch, and he sees Brynhild in bed, lying in armour, which he splits open with his sword. This wakes her, and she asks who he is, he identifies himself and she welcomes him. He says to have been shown the way to her by an eagle. Brynhild wants him to ask her father if they can marry, but Sjúrdur declines to do so, saying she has waited long enough. They fall in love and conceive a child, Ása Sjúrdardóttir. He gives her twelve gold rings. (98–113) Guðrun draws Sjúrdur to her. Sjúrdur asks Brynhild to fetch him a saddle, bridle and armour; Brynhild's heart chills, she understands Guðrun's plan. Sjúrdur declares it unlikely he would lose his love for her, but Brynhild begs him not to go. Sjúrdur rides away early one morning and meets her father on the way. Her father knows what will happen and foretells he will marry Guðrun and never have Brynhild. He says Sjúrdur ought to keep his promise to Brynhild, but Sjúrdur once again declares it unlikely he would lose his love for her, although her father warns him that something shameful will happen and he should not ride to the court of Júki, and asks Sjúrdur to remember his words. (114–37) Sjúrdur rides into the woods and encounters a beast spewing fire and poison. It suddenly disappears and Grimhild is sitting in its place. She bewitches his horse so that he can not continue, and she grabs the reins. Sjúrdur says this is bold of her, she asks him to stop and speak to her beautiful daughter. Sjúrdur says she is not equal to Brynhild. Guðrun comes out and says it will hardly go well to covet a man another has, for which her mother hits her in the mouth and tells her to hold her tongue. Guðrun mixes a drink of forgetfulness, and Sjúrdur loses his memory, forgets about Brynhild, and wants to marry Guðrun. (138–42) Sjúrdur goes to the bedroom to find Guðrun, Brynhild hears about it and is full of spite. The narrator says Sjúrdur will lose his life. Brynhild says Guðrun will not have him, and echoes Guðrun’s words that to covet a man another has will not go well. (143–54) Brynhild and Guðrun meet, one happy and one in grief. They are at a river and Guðrun will not use the water flowing downstream from Brynhild washing her hair because she married Sjúrdur and thus thinks herself superior, so she goes further out into the river. Guðrun asks where Brynhild got her ring from and she answers that she was given it by Sjúrdur. Guðrun wonders why King Gunnar will not marry Brynhild, but Brynhild says she will not love two kings in one hall. Guðrun says to Brynhild that Sjúrdur took Brynhild’s virginity and points out that now she has him. Brynhild accuses Guðrun of lying and says Sjúrdur shall die. Guðrun is undeterred. (155–160) Brynhild cries and goes to sit in her hall, Gunnar comes to visit her, but she tells him he cannot expect her to love him when Sjúrdur still lives. Sjúrdur comes to see her, she tells him he has not been faithful, and he says his thoughts were turned from her. (161–63) As soon as she sees him, Brynhild delivers a daughter. She orders the baby to be put into the river, and she floats away. (164–69) The narrator says that Brynhild will bring about the death of Sjúrdur and comments that many men have endured threats for women and that women will cause Sjúrdur to die. (170–87) Brynhild, adorned with gold and her hair in a twist, is very angry and goes into the hall. Sjúrdur kicks her chair which angers her. Høgnar says he will take revenge on the one who has offended her, and Brynhild says she cannot sleep while Sjúrdur still lives. Høgnar says Sjúrdur is his sworn brother and he cannot do anything to him, and Brynhild answers he will get no love from her while he still lives. Høgnar says fighting Sjúrdur is no easy task, and she repeats he will get no love from her while Sjúrdur lives. The men plan to ride to the forest, and Brynhild tells them not to return until Sjúrdur has been killed. They ask why she wants to put them in mortal danger since no one can withstand him. They ask her for advice on how to kill him, and she tells them to give him salty food and no drink with it. (188–92) Sjúrdur is in the hall and Brynhild cannot look at him. She says she will never turn her love from him, Sjúrdur acknowledges the situation is bad and says when they return from the forest, he will be betrothed to her. She says that will not happen. (193–209) The men ride out, and Brynhild is left behind crying. Buðlin says Sjúrdur should be given his helmet since he will need to drink from it, but Brynhild says it shall be left behind. Buðlin asks why she is causing his death, she says it is because he does not love her. Her father reminds her of when she drew Sjúrdur to her. Buðlin walks out of the hall, Brynhild is left with her head in her hands. The narrator comments women are dangerous. Sjúrdur has no idea what is afoot as Brynhild looks out at him riding in front of the men. Sjúrdur's sword is also left behind. Brynhild cries in torment and says she will not see him alive again. (210–28) The men give Sjúrdur salty food and no drink while Brynhild sits on Hildarstólur. Sjúrdur cannot scoop up water to drink since he does not have his helmet, so he loosens his helmet, dismounts and lies down to drink.⁴ Høgnar cuts his throat and Gunnar hacks at him. Sjúrdur says had he known about this, he would have defeated all of them, and he knocks Gunnar off his horse and says that although Høgnar has killed him now, he has defeated him previously in Finnmark. He goes pale. (229–35) A messenger comes to tell Brynhild that Sjúrdur is dead, killed by Gunnar, she faints from Hildarstólur. Gunnar comes to visit her, she is crying in bed and he sits by her bedside. Gunnar says the corpse shall be brought back to the hall. (236–45) The men change horses, but Grani will not move because he has a mind like a person, and will not move until the decapitated Sjúrdur is put on him. Sjúrdur is taken home to the hall and laid by Guðrun. Brynhild is in great distress on seeing the dead man being carried in. (246–56) Brynhild dies of grief. The narrator emphasizes many men have died due to women and gives the examples of Hósin's daughter, Ingigerð, Delilah, Ásla Sjúrdardóttir and Guðrun Júkadóttir. (257–65) The dead Sjúrdur is laid in Guðrun's lap and she wakes covered in blood. She knows Gunnar has been involved in this, and she kisses Sjúrdur, swears to take revenge on Gunnar and runs to her loft. (266–70) It is mentioned again that Brynhild dies of sorrow. Guðrun receives gold, property and rings. A brother and her mother mentions King Artala has a lot of gold. Guðrun replies she will avenge Sjúrdur's death. (271) The narrator ends the ballad.

The Ballad of Høgni (Høgna táttur)

(1–7) Artala is married to Guðrun. He announces to his men this shall be so, and he rides through the forest. Guðrun is stood before him, they are married and he takes her back to Húnaland. Guðrun plots to avenge Sjúrdur. (8–11) Artala invites Júki's people (Guðrun's family) to drink at their home, and Guðrun's invites her brothers. She has wine mixed. (12–20) Høgnar says

4 As noted in the translation, it is emphasized and important for the plot that Sjúrdur does not have a helmet with him. However, in st. 215 it is explicitly stated that he loosens his helmet straps.

he wants to go to Húnaland, but Grimhild warns if he goes, neither he nor the others will return. She wants Gíslar and Jarnar to stay at home, but they go. (21–28) Høgnar meets a mermaid on the beach, and asks her whether he will return safely from Húnaland. She says he will not and he chops her in two pieces and throws her head and body into the sea. Høgnar meets a merman, and asks him whether he will return safely from Húnaland. The merman says he will. (29–34) Høgnar launches a ship. Grimhild, crying, turns back to the court and says she will not see him alive again since she knows Guðrun will harm him. Høgnar tells Gunnar they are setting sail for the sea. (35–44) A man sees the ship and says it must be Høgnar on his way to visit his sister. Guðrun carves runes and send them out to sea. The wind picks up and the weather becomes severe. Høgnar is steering and Gunnar goes pale. The ship creaks and the oars break apart in Høgnar’s hands. They land in Húnaland, the ships still making a lot of noise. (45–51) Høgnar steps on to land with Gíslar, Jarnar, and Gunnar and they go to the castle’s garden. As they enter the castle, Høgnar can see evil on Guðrun’s face. (52–65) Guðrun offers to store their weapons. Høgnar refuses to give his up. Guðrun asks if they remember anything about Sjúrdur, who they laid bloody in her lap. Guðrun relates how Sjúrdur was a better man. Høgnar thinks to himself that Guðrun is not in a good mood if she is taking up that topic. The table is set with beer. Guðrun once more asks them to discard their weapons, and Høgnar refuses. They drink mead and wine, but Guðrun is unhappy there is no conflict. (66–75) Guðrun coaxes her young son to silence Høgnar’s laughter and promises him gold. He punches Høgnar on the nose, even though he initially refused to do so. Blood runs from Høgnar’s nose and mouth, and he says he doesn’t thank the mother who raised the child like that. He runs his sword through the child, killing him, and throws the head on the floor so King Artala can see it. (76–95) Guðrun informs Artala that Høgnar has killed their child and that she will not rule Húnaland with him any longer if he doesn’t take revenge. Artala refuses since Høgnar is her brother and also points out that Gíslar and Jarnar had nothing to do with the death of Sjúrdur. Guðrun wants them both to pay for the death anyway and declares she will have them killed. Artala says it is not easy to kill Høgnar and asks her for a plot to kill her brothers. Guðrun tells him to take three skins and smear them with blood, then to attack her brothers (the implication being when they fall on the skins). She informs her brothers they shall walk on the skins. Høgnar tries to send Gíslar and Jarnar back to their mother, saying that he and Gunnar were responsible for slaying Sjúrdur. (96–107) Gíslar and Jarnar walked on the skins, and no one saw them get up (they have been killed). Gunnar walks on the skins and does not rise. Guðrun tells Høgnar she is avenging Sjúrdur. Høgnar walks on the skins carrying his sword in the air and he doesn't fall. (108–15) Guðrun is angry because Høgnar is unharmed, and Høgnar says that before evening, they will be drinking blood like wine. Guðrun has 1200 men armoured, and Høgnar rides against them all, killing many of them. (116–28) In the morning, Guðrun comes out and finds Høgnar unharmed. She sends him into the forest to see wonders he slew in the past, and he does so. He sees a giant horse Guðrun has conjured up by witchcraft, bearing Sjúrdur. The apparition of Sjúrdur speaks to him and says that Høgnar did evil when he betrayed him, that both Brynhild and Guðrun had loved him, and therefore he had lost his life. Sjúrdur gives Høgnar a runic belt he got from the dead dwarf maiden and says he will now ride to the heathen forest. (130–36) Early in the morning, Guðrun has armoured 1200 men and Høgnar rides against them all, killing many of them, commenting that however many he kills, Guðrun brings them back to life during the night. (137–58) Guðrun has Tíðrikur Tatlarason brought to her and she says if he took Høgnar's life it would be a manly deed. He asks how he should fight against someone who no weapons can hurt, and that no one is Høgnar's equal now that Sjúrdur is dead. He states he will not win against Høgnar, and the queen goes grey. Guðrun promises to reward him with gold and property if he rides against him, and Tíðrikur responds that he will fly through the sky and see how it goes, turning into a dragon. Høgnar, who is fighting, sees the dragon flying above him. He throws his sword into the sky and it runs through Tíðrikur, who has the sword in his heart. The dragon spews down poison onto Høgnar, which burns him severely. The poison flows towards his heart, and he goes pale and is forced back to the walls of the hall. (159–77) Guðrun comes out early in the morning and is angry to see Høgnar, apparently standing unharmed leaning on the hall walls. Høgnar asks her if he can sleep during the night with Helvík the jarl's daughter, claiming he has not received a wound. Guðrun says he will be allowed this since he will be dead soon. Høgnar lies with Helvík and they conceive a son. Høgnar carves runes and they are read immediately. He says Helvík will have a son, she should call him Høgnar and that he will give him his sword, inherited from his father. The boy should also avenge his death. He also advises her on how to thwart Guðrun's plan to kill the baby by swapping him with Guðrun's baby. After twelve years, the child will recognize her. He gives her the runic belt and dies. They dress his corpse for burial, and he is buried in a mound.

The Second Ballad of Høgni or The Ballad of Aldrias (Annar Høgna táttur or Aldrias táttur)

(1–13) Guðrun and Helvík both give birth to boys. Helvík has the boy baptized as Høgnar, and Guðrun has her son called Sveinur. They sit inside for some days and then go out, Guðrun asking Helvík to go first. Helvík declines, saying she must go out first. Helvík switches their babies. Guðrun takes what she believes to be Helvík's child and cuts its throat. (14–15) Høgnar grows rapidly, and is fostered by the king of Húnaland. (16–28) Helvík rides to Lindará and meets her son there, and tells him she is his mother. He says she is lying, and at her invitation cuts her with a knife. This causes him such pain he believes that she is his mother, and she tells him he must avenge his father. She gives him a runestick that Høgnar gave him. In the runestick, he could see his father's death. She gives him the rune belt she got from Høgnar. She tells him that when he gets to the hall, no one must find him. (29–38) Early in the morning Høgnar wants to ride to the hall and he goes inside. The flame from a light burns through his foot, King Artala points out to him that his foot is burning and asks what he is thinking about. Høgnar answers that he is thinking that even though Artala possesses great riches, at some point in his life he may have to beg for water and bread. Artala says this will not happen. (39–51) Early in the morning, Høgnar invites Artala to ride to the forest, and they do so. They go to the gold cliff to examine the riches. Artala tells Sveinur (Høgnar) that he should go in first, but he says that since Artala is wearing a higher crown, he should go in first. Artala looks around the door, and Sveinur slams it shut, trapping him inside. He asks Artala whether he wants to beg for bread and water, and Artala does so. Høgnar gets a lot of gold and doesn't return until the king shrivels up and dies. (52–53) Høgnar stays the night with his mother and then rides to the king of Denmark. The narrator ends by saying many the woman is wretched, and Guðrun walks around the world holding Grani's reins.

The Ballad of Gestur or The Ballad of Ásla (Gests ríma or Áslu ríma)

(1–3) Gestur goes to the river and finds a harp. He carries the harp on his back and stays the night at a farm where a maiden/hag lives. (4–6) The maiden/hag invites Gestur to stay with her for the night, saying Haki will be back from the forest soon, and since Gestur couldn't do anything else, he puts the harp by the fire. Haki comes back from the forest shortly afterwards. (7–9) The hag says to Haki that they shall kill Gestur that night, but Haki refuses saying he has no issue with him. She says she will kill him herself. (10–11) The hag goes up and kills Gestur. (12–14) The hag breaks up the harp and finds a maiden dressed in red. The hag says the maiden shall have an easy life, be called Kráka and be her daughter. The maiden says she is not named Kráka. (15–23) Ragnar lands and his men go into Haki's courtyard with bread to be baked. A maiden comes in and out of the courtyard and they stare at her while the bread burns. The hag pours a brewing vessel over Kráka and tells her where to sit, Kráka refuses and the hag hits her. The men ask why she hits such a beautiful woman, and she replies she has killed people in the past. (24–34) The men tear out a piece of Kráka's hair and carry it to the ship. Ragnar asks why the food is spoiled, and they say they saw a very beautiful maiden, more beautiful than Tóra. Ragnar replies that if they are mocking him, they will all be going to the gallows. They show him the hair and he says to go and tell her that Ragnar wants to see her, which they do. (35–37) Ása is out walking and calls to her a little young dog.

The Ballad of Nornagestur (Nornagests ríma)

(1) The narrator announces that this is a ballad about Nornagestur. (2–6) Twelve oxen were led to a market and then to a castle, where they were killed by the king with a great blow that everyone praised. A lot of blood flowed. (7–8) The king asks the old man (Nornagestur) why he did not praise his blow, and the man replies that the king's blow was angry and he has seen more graceful ones in the past. (9–15) The king asks if he can tell the story of Sjúrdur. Nornagestur replies that he can, no one has seen such a man, leaf and grove shook when he chopped the dragon apart. Høgni was an honourable man although ugly. Gunnar was strong, powerful, wise and kind like Grimhild and it will be a long time before another like him is born. (16–19) Gunnar, Høgni and Sjúrdur rode home round the marsh, Gunnar and Høgni's horses both jumped over, but Grani (Sjúrdur's horse) got stuck in the fen. Nornagestur comments he has often trodden in the marsh himself. (20–25) All dismounted, and all pulled on their horses, Sjúrdur the most. He orders Nornagestur to clean his horse. They rode by a river and couldn't see each other. Nornagestur cleans the horse and Sjúrdur takes him as his squire. (26–28) They ride to Fávnir's lair where there is shining gold. The hair in the horse's tail is extremely long and sparkles like silver. (29–31) The king gave him weapons and a ship and told him the way. Nornagestur says that he spent his life scouting lands, and he has travelled extensively. (32–33) The courteous man dives down to lead,⁵ and Kørnar the priest baptizes Nornagestur, who dies as the candle burns out.

5 This seems to be a lead lantern at the bottom of the sea, in which his candle is kept.

Ísmal the Brave Hero (Ísmal fræga kempa)

(1–4) Ísmal tells Hermundur that they shall ride to the king’s court to ask for his daughter. He throws a cloak on and walks into the halls where Hjalprek sits at the table with five hundred men. (5–8) Ísmal stands on the hall floor with a silk-buttoned hat, red cheeks and blue eyes. He asks for the king’s daughter, and the king thinks about how he should give a mocking reply, saying that if Sjúrdur were to stand by Ísmal, he would be his equal. (9–12) Svanhild walks in and falls in love with Ísmal. The king thinks about how he should give a friendly reply. He tells Ísmal he will give him his daughter and a wedding feast as well. Svanhild and Ísmal are betrothed, he leaves then is sent for by the king. (13–23) Ísmal asks who will invite Sjúrdur to the wedding, the king tells him to invite him himself. Ísmal rides into the forest and meets Sjúrdur, who is not happy. Ísmal invites him to the wedding, and Sjúrdur asks him who he is betrothed to. Ísmal tells him it is his sister and Sjúrdur says that if he has been betrothed to her without his having been asked, he will beat him with clubs. Ísmal offers him another option, and Sjúrdur says Ísmal will have to complete some hard tasks. (24–30) Ísmal asks what the first task is, and Sjúrdur says in the forest there are dragons and Ísmal shall kill all of them before he can be married. Ísmal asks how big they are and Sjúrdur tells him, then Ísmal says he is not afraid. He kills all the dragons but has poison breathed on to him and doesn’t manage to leave. (31–37) Sjúrdur goes back to the court and Svanhild is waiting outside. He sits in the highseat and the castle shakes. He tells his father he wishes his neck was broken since he wasn’t asked about the betrothal. Svanhild asks whether he has contrived a plot that Ísmal should perform deeds. He tells her to leave since it wouldn’t be seemly to kill a woman. Svanhild begins to cry and Sjúrdur tells her to get out of his sight, although admits Ísmal was not a lesser man than he was. (38–41) Sjúrdur mounts his horse and goes back to the forest for his sister’s sake. Ísmal, lying on the field in danger from the dragons, is relieved to hear Grani approaching. Sjúrdur takes him into the saddle and, dreading his wounds, finds ointment to put on him. (42–46) Sjúrdur takes Ísmal home and gives him to Svanhild to heal. When he is healed, they have the wedding prepared and many people are invited, including the king of France. (47–50) Ísmal’s bridesmen are King Hjalprek and Gunnar. Svanhild’s bridesmaids include Gunnhild, Grimhild, Brynhild and Guðrun. Ørvaroddur played the harp and Hjálmar supported the maidens. (51–53) There are abundant newly made silver dishes, Sjúrdur stands on the hall floor and tells tales of bold heroes. Sjúrdur is upset by Brynhild’s conversation and breaks a mead cup on the table. (54–58) Everyone was happy and the lady was escorted with candles and lanterns and an organ playing in the garden to sleep on the first night. Ísmal and his wife enter the same bed. (59–60) After a long wedding celebration with as many courtiers in attendance as there are feathers in a bird's wing, everyone went home. (61) The narrator ends the ballad.

Sjúrdur and the Dwarf Maiden or Dwarf Maiden I (Sjúrdur og Dvørgamoy or Dvørgamoy I)

(1–5) The narrator tells that he has known of a ballad for a long time. Hjalprekur rules a kingdom and of his many heroes, the foremost one is Sjúrdur. The narrator says he will now compose verses about Sjúrdur's first expedition when he rode out for the first time. (6–10) Early in the morning, Sjúrdur dresses himself and the horse, adorned in scarlet, is untied. Sjúrdur puts on his new armour and says that he wants to go into the forest and see marvels. (11–33) Sjúrdur rode into the forest for three days, unable to see or hear anything. On the fourth day, he sees a great fleet, and as he goes towards it, he sees a whole ring of dwarves in front of him. The dwarves ask if he has come to play and he doesn't dare to answer. The dwarves are annoyed, and he thinks to himself that he doesn't want to be killed and that they can choose the terms. The dwarves attack, and Sjúrdur gets punched in the nose so the blood flows down his armour. This incenses him and he kills a dwarf. Another dwarf exclaims that particular dwarf wasn't in their band and that if he takes down another, he will not be leaving. (34–38) The dwarves disappear and Sjúrdur walks in the dark. It is frosty and he is lost. The dwarf maiden, wise and sensible, comes to him, wearing clothes bordered with gold. He asks her to take him home to the hall. (39–46) She leads him to a castle on pillars, and he asks who lives there. She replies that it is her father's castle and that he should not respond to what her father says to him. Nor should he go into the smithy with him, because the father knows Sjúrdur is easy to goad. He should lie down on the floor in the hall; if he answers, he will lose his head. (47–59) Sjúrdur comes into the hall late in the evening, the dwarf is in his smithy. The dwarf sees a large horse tied up by the hall door, which incenses him. He asks what kind of warrior has arrived. The dwarf puts on his armour and gets his spear and asks for the guest to be brought in; his daughter explains Sjúrdur is in trouble and tired, and should not be harmed. The dwarf tells Sjúrdur to drink mead and wine and tells him to come into his smithy. As Sjúrdur rises to go, he remembers the dwarf maiden has told him not to answer. The dwarf says he will give him armour and a spear. (60–65) Early in the morning Sjúrdur dresses to ride home. He tells the dwarf maiden to get him home to the hall. She is grief-stricken but says she will get him far enough to see Hjalprekur's castle. They part sorrowfully and kiss. The dwarf maiden turns back crying, and Sjúrdur goes home to King Hjalprekur.

The Beautiful Dwarf Maiden or Dwarf Maiden II (Dvørgamoygginn fagra or Dvørgamoy II)

(1–5) Ásmundur says he could not have the maiden that came here last night. Ásmundur rides out early in the morning. A king⁶ takes the dwarf maiden home with him and tells his men to invite guests to the wedding. They are to ride to Sjúrdur. The king comments he knows Ásmundur and his men. (6–11) The king's men ride out and Larsin the dwarf king arrives back to his hall, finding that sword, shield and the woman have all disappeared. Ásmundur asks him if he is not intending to take revenge on the king who has taken the maiden. The dwarf king says both his sword and shield are gone, and then Ásmundur says he will lend a sword and shield to the dwarf, and that he will also go on the journey himself to visit the king of the Huns. (12–19) They ride to the hall and find the king and the dwarf maiden playing chess. A man comes into the hall and tells him that an army is approaching the castle. The king arms himself and comments that Høgni and his troops are a long way away and that Sjúrdur and Virgar are not home. He asks his brother Gíslar to explain his intentions to the dwarf king and Ásmundur and to invite them to drink mead. He does so, and the dwarf king replies that he is dressed for battle and if the king does not hand the woman back, then he will have to defend himself. (20–27) Early in the morning they start their battles near the king's hall. Ásmundur rides to the army and the king comes towards him, strikes him and he falls off his horse. This was caused by the king's queen carving runes. Everyone sees him fall off and lose. The dwarf kills the whole army and takes the woman back. The king loses land but survives. (28–31) A man comes into the hall to tell the king that his brother Høgni and Sjúrdur are here. He welcomes Høgni by telling him that the army, land and the woman are all lost. Høgni replies he has been unable to find Virgar, who went to a foreign land to propose to a maiden. Sjúrdur answers they will ride to the cliff and find the dwarf king. (32–50) They ride to the cliff and Sjúrdur opens the door of the cavern with difficulty. The maiden sits at a table, the dwarf is in the smithy. The dwarf comments that often it is best to be a long way from men than to be their friends. Høgni replies that they are not friends and have come to avenge the damage inflicted on their brother. The dwarf arms himself and rides to a forest. Høgni lands a great blow on him but it didn't pierce his armour. They fought for twelve hours and Høgni begins to get tired and give ground, eventually falling off his horse. Early in the morning, Sjúrdur fastens his helmet on and gives a great blow, that also doesn't pierce the dwarf's armour. They fight for twelve hours, Sjúrdur begins to get tired, and the sword gets too heavy, so he throws three spears, none of which injure the dwarf. He hits the dwarf over the head with his sword, which also does not injure the dwarf. The dwarf hits Sjúrdur so hard it knocks his helmet off. Then the dwarf gives him such a blow that Sjúrdur's armour splits and Grani falls to his knees. Sjúrdur has planned this and now is able to split the shields and armour of the dwarf. Wounded, the dwarf gives Sjúrdur the victory. (51–53) Sjúrdur and Høgni ride to the dwarf's castle, where the maiden is alone sewing white linen. They take her and the gold. Sjúrdur puts her on the back of his horse and takes her back to the hall, the narrator says that now the ballad will end. (54–55) Sjúrdur does not take the maiden back to the king, but back to his own hall, telling Høgni to tell the king that the maiden is his reward. The maiden joins the women at his hall but doesn't want to. She had aided Ásmundur well when he needed it. (56–60) Høgni had a son with the same name, until he defeated Artala. He sailed into a harbour and lay there until the quarrel was avenged. After this, he was called Aldrias. Ásmundur Aldriansson ruled over Húnaland after Artan's death.

6 Although the king this ballad features is not named, it must be King Gunnar, since Gíslar and Høgni are his brothers.

(1–8) Early in the morning, Sjúrdur dresses himself and gets ready to ride. He rides into the forest where he sees a golden hall open and the gold spills out. The hall is made of precious materials. Sjúrdur thinks to himself he shall go inside. He walks into the hall and a beautiful dwarf maiden is sitting before him. She says he is too highborn to stand and fetches him a chair. She says that many have asked for a lady's hand, but none can be compared to him. (9–10) She leads him into her hall, and says that he can see it is edged with gold and is spacious. (11–23) Sjúrdur wants to know who the two warriors are that ride in the forest, she says they are called Hálvdan and Eirikur, who are riding to Ásgarðar to test Óðin's heroes. She says the weather is bad in her land and it is better to fall in love with her in golden castles. Sjúrdur replies that he will not marry his property away on heathen lands. Ása the dwarf maiden unlocks a chest and hands him clothes that none in his land have the skills to make. Sjúrdur says he will not bring heathen clothes back to his land. She gives him armour, and he says he will not bring heathen armour to his land. (24–26) She answers he should stay with her for the night and leave tomorrow. He says that he will not stay longer and will hurry on his way. He stays the night and conceives a child with the dwarf maiden. (27–37) Early in the morning Sjúrdur dresses himself and gets ready to ride. She asks when she can expect him to visit her. He promises to come in three months. Sjúrdur leaves the hall cheerful, but Grani has run away. He goes back into the mound, she lends him a horse and goes on the way with him. Sjúrdur is cheerful and finds Grani just outside the forest. (38–57) Sjúrdur was going to ride to the hall when a giant suddenly came down from the mountains. Sjúrdur has to turn back after the giant throws his spear into the field. Sjúrdur asks to go home, and they should meet another time. The giant says Sjúrdur won't make it one step further because he has slept with the dwarf maiden and not told him about it. The giant deals out heavy blows, sometimes Sjúrdur dodges and sometimes fights back. Grani comes running and things start to go better. Sjúrdur leaps into the saddle and says he shall now fight the mountain giant. They fight for two days and on the third day as the sun goes down, Sjúrdur chops the giant in two at the knee. The giant plants the stumps on the ground and continues fighting. Sjúrdur chops the giant in half again. (58–62) Sjúrdur is cheerful and rides home to the hall. Hjalprekur asks him where he has been for the evening and Sjúrdur says he fought a mountain giant. (63–67) Early in the morning, Sjúrdur dresses himself and gets ready to ride. He rides into the forest and sees the golden hall. He goes into the same mound as previously, and finds the dwarf maiden dead. He buried her in the mound and lays much gold with her. He also buries the beautiful baby girl. Then he rides back to the hall.

(1–9) Tíðrikur sits in Brattingsborg, and the narrator says he will compose verses on the theme of dwarves. Tíðrikur wants to ride to the heathen forest and Virgar says he if goes, he will not come back. Tíðrikur's horse is untied while Virgar remains at home, until eventually he rides out to find Tíðrikur and catches up with him. (10–21) Tíðrikur orders that the horses shall rest and they shall walk into the forest. They sleep there and Virgar wakes to the sound of horses. He leaps on his horse's back, takes his sword and sees a might giant, who asks him why he rides in Birtingsškógur, his lord's land.

The giant is Sjúrdur, and he aims blows with his sword at Virgar and lands each one. Tíðrikur wakes, hears the swords and is afraid when Virgar is gone. Sjúrdur hacks with his sword Grammur so that sparks fly from Virgar's armour. Tíðrikur goes home, leaving his shield and sword behind. (22–34) Sjúrdur hacks until he is tired and sits on the field, both he and Virgar are unhappy. Virgar asks him what family he is from, and he says he is Sjúrdur and closest to King Hjalprekur in terms of gold, authority and ability. Virgar says that if Sjúrdur had had his sword, Mimaring, he would not have been able to withstand him. Sjúrdur recognizes Virgar and asks where Tíðrikur is. Virgar says that Tíðrikur is in the forest, and that they shall ride to Tíðrikur's home to gain more honour. Sjúrdur says no one dares to turn his horse away. The narrator says such arguments rarely end well. Sjúrdur says they shall ride through the forest and perform more great deeds. (35–41) Early in the morning, Sjúrdur and Virgar ride in heathen forests. (42–51) Dragons and wolves start to howl and a storm approaches. The riding conditions are bad. Giants are singing. Virgar becomes afraid and suggests they turn back. Sjúrdur advises him that that suggestion ought not to be known about at home. Sjúrdur says they shall ride through the forest. (52–66) They come to a house and Sjúrdur says they shall stay with the women there and continue the next day. Inside the house there are many beautiful swords and two maidens sitting at the table. Costly drink is on the table which Sjúrdur takes. Sjúrdur asks who rules the castle, and Virgar says if they don't answer they will be placed before swords. A dwarf maiden answers it is her father Kvørfinn who rules the castle and that he is away in the forest fighting giants to get ore from the crags. Virgar says they shall take the dwarf maidens back to the hall with them. (67–71) Virgar takes the two maidens on his horse and Sjúrdur takes the best sword the dwarf had made and snaps all the others. He takes as much gold and silver as the horse can carry and they depart. (72–77) Kvørfinn comes home and sees the swords and maidens are gone. He makes a new sword and swears to avenge the maidens. (78–84) Sjúrdur and Virgar go home and are greeted by Hjalprek outside the court. He asks who Virgar with the two maidens is, and he is identified by Sjúrdur. Hjalprek tells Virgar to go into the hall with his maidens. Virgar was tired and slept for three nights at Hjalprek's. (85–93) Early in the morning, Virgar dresses himself and embraces the maidens. He asks Hjalprek to lend him a ship to take the maidens over the sound and Hjalprek agrees. They sail, and Virgar has castles built in which to keep the two maidens. They should sit there and weave silk. Virgar went back to Tíðrikur.

The Giant of Hólmgarðar or The Mound Ghost (Risin í Hólmgørðum or Dysjadólgur)

(1–2) The narrator knows a ballad about Virgar, Sjúrdur and Nornagestur. (3–11) There are three paths, and one deviates from the others. Virgar goes to the mound where his grandfather lies. He asks his grandfather if he is awake and identifies himself. The grandfather refuses to leave the mound. Virgar asks him for Miming (a sword) and says he is breaking up the mound with his hands to get to it. The occupant within the mound (the mound-ghost) doesn't want the mound to be broken up so sends up the sword. Virgar asks him where medicines can be found. The mound-ghost says he knows of a lot of medicines, but that Virgar will not win them. He tells him about a house in Hólmgarðar full of medicine and says that he ought not leave Sjúrdur behind if he goes on the trip. (12–17) Virgar mounts his horse and goes to meet Sjúrdur. In the garden, he dons his cloak and goes before Sjúrdur, who is sitting next to Hjalprekur. Virgar tells Sjúrdur he knows of a lot of medicine if he is man enough to win it, and that he must equip himself. (18–23) Virgar and Sjúrdur ride from the hall with Nornagestur. They go to the hall, Vilkus the giant's son is standing outside and Sjúrdur asks if he has any medicine spare to sell him. The giant says he does not and asks who he is travelling with. Virgar is identified as the one who slew the giant. The giant thanks him for telling him and says he shall arm his company since he was the one who lost. (24–33) Early in the morning the giant had armoured his troops and Sjúrdur and Virgar ride against them. They fought for two full days and Virgar got tired, he fell backwards spreadeagled. Nornagestur saves him and takes him away. Sjúrdur fights heavily and splits the giant's army. Virgar is injured but gets up and continues to fight. They fight together until just the giant and one of his men are left. (34–36) The giant creeps to the castle gate and begs Sjúrdur for mercy. Sjúrdur says he can have mercy if he can hide himself. Virgar arrives and chops the giant in two. (37–40) Sjúrdur says he has won the medicine and Virgar should thank him. Virgar says Sjúrdur has won and should accept the medicine. Virgar takes the medicine away on two steeds and Sjúrdur ruled in Holmgarðar.

The Giant of Leittraberg (Risin av Leittrabergi)

(1–13) The narrator knows a ballad. There is a giant on Leittraberg that speaks with his heroes, wanting to know where his father's killer is, since he wants to avenge him. The leader of the men, Filkussonur, says he will not win against his father's killer. He is asked again and Filkussonur says it was Sjúrdur. The giant of Leittraberg asks where Sjúrdur lives and is told he lives in Hólmgarðar in Norway. It is told he has killed many giants and that if the giant goes to Hólmgarðar, he will end up dead. The giant threatens to have Filkussonur burnt on a bonfire, who replies that if he does so he will never take Sjúrdur prisoner. Filkussonur dresses in new armour and says Sjúrdur will not be his prisoner. (14–22) The giant leaves and goes to forge himself a shield and sword. He has ships made and readied, with ropes made out of gold. He loads his ship with twenty barrels of gold. When he steps on his ship it goes under the water slightly, they set sail and don't stop before Norway. (23–32) A shepherd sitting on a hill sees the ships coming and goes into the king's hall, thinking he is wiser than they are. He tells that the giant of Leittraberg is coming to avenge his father and that he has seen a giant walking across the deck. Sjúrdur says that in his dream the night before that Grani stood saddled with a lot of blood before him, that his spear fell from his belt and that his sword rang out on armour. (33–40) The giant has the anchor lowered and is the first to go ashore, Filkussonur with him. They drag their ship ashore. Sjúrdur sends a man down to the beach to offer the giant peace, to sit at the table and drink mead, as long as they do no dirty tricks. (41–50) The messenger walks down to the beach to offer this, and the giant bites him in half at the waist. This is seen by Sjúrdur from the window, and he tells his men to arm themselves and not to fear the giant's large army. He fastens his helmet on tightly. (51–65) The giant puts his cloak on and goes into the hall where Sjúrdur sits by the table. Sjúrdur welcomes the giant and invites him to drink, but the giant refuses, saying he has received no reparations for his father. Sjúrdur says he will not be receiving any. The giant takes a swing at Sjúrdur, who dodges. The giant drags Sjúrdur by the hair, and Sjúrdur says no one has ever done that before. Sjúrdur leaps up, upends the tables, and brandishes his sword. There is chaos in the hall and Sjúrdur strikes the giant so he falls backwards out of the hall onto the field. The giant says he has come from Leittraberg and tells Sjúrdur to arm his troops and come out of the hall. (66–101) Early in the morning, Sjúrdur has equipped them and they battle close to the hall. Filkussonur kills every man who goes against him. Sjúrdur then tells Nornagestur to saddle Grani and he rides into battle felling the giant's men. He clashes with Filkussonur. Nothing harms Sjúrdur, but he hits Filkussonur so hard his head bursts in his helmet and he cuts him in two. Sjúrdur sees almost all of his army has been killed and it diminishes his former joy in the battle. He clashes with the giant of Leittraberg. The weapons of the giant break, and he goes back to his ship to get a shield and a sword. He can cover eighteen ells in one step on his way back from the ship, and he says to Sjúrdur that he will teach him how to fight. Sjúrdur says it would have been better to be inside than fight with trolls. Nornagestur puts three new helmets on Sjúrdur's head, and the giant chops them off. Sjúrdur puts on a helmet he got from a dwarf maiden and now nothing can hurt him. They fight and Sjúrdur decides to use stratagems that he has seldom used. He turns and jousts. The giant is not injured on the first joust, but on the second he pierces the giant's heart and poison spurts into the sky and blocks out the sun. On the third joust he chops the giant apart at the knees. (102–7) Sjúrdur, now happy and cheerful, rides Grani back to the hall and tells Nornagestur to pour him a drink. After drinking, he complains about Grani, his horse. He goes down to the beach and gets twenty barrels of gold from the giant's ship. The narrator says he cannot sing more than what has been said in the ballad. Sjúrdur sits down in a chair and rules over Hólmgarðar now as before.
