

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I AM INDEBTED to the support of many people over many years. I began thinking about this project as an undergraduate student at Trent University and submitted my first paper on this topic to Fiona Harris-Stoertz in 2014. Thanks to her encouragement, I pursued this project at the graduate level. I must thank my doctoral supervisory committee, Marica Cassis, John Geck, Sébastien Rossignol, and Katherine Weikert. Their suggestions and guidance were instrumental to my development as a scholar and the fruition of this research project. The feedback I received from members of my doctoral examination committee, Edwin Bezzina, Sonja Boon, and Kathleen Cawsey, helped me refine my arguments. Sonja's insightful observations provided the foundation for this book. Sara Butler helped answer my questions and generously reviewed an early version of this project. Hannah Wood, my friend and conference buddy, has kept me laughing throughout this process, even when it was difficult. This book would not exist without Katherine Weikert's incredible support and mentorship. I cannot accurately express my appreciation for Kate's kindness and reassurance over the years.

Research funding that I received through the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, Memorial University of Newfoundland's Scholarship in the Arts, Memorial's Funding for Doctoral Studies, Memorial's President's Doctoral Student Invest Fund, and Acadia University's Research Fund all made this project possible.

I am indebted to my family who have continually cheered me on throughout my academic career. None of this would have been possible without the support from my Grandpa Orval Cooper and Aunt Brenda. To my parents, Steve and Brenda, and my husband, Ian, thank you all for listening to me as I talked about the ideas in this book for the past decade. Ian, thank you for your patience as I spent many nights tucked away in the office writing. My most profound thank you goes to my mom, Brenda: my personal editor, conference buddy, and research trip assistant. Her unwavering support has been invaluable.

Lastly, I want to acknowledge the women and girls whose stories I have attempted to tell. This book stands as a testament to their strength and perseverance in going to court and having their truth written down and preserved for future generations.
