

Contents

Acknowledgments	11
1 Introduction: Remembering (and forgetting) colonial genocide	13
2 Discursive context: The Herero and Nama genocide	21
2.1 Historical overview: German South-West Africa, 1904–1908	21
2.2 Memorializing and negotiating the genocide in Germany and Namibia	25
3 Journalism and memory: First draft or final say?	33
3.1 Cultural memory: A theoretical orientation	33
3.1.1 Collective memory: The social construction of the past	34
3.1.2 Cultural memory: The institutional frameworks of memory production	36
3.1.3 The (re-)mediation of cultural memory: Perspectives from memory studies	39
3.2 Journalism's production of cultural memory	44
3.2.1 Journalism as a (contested) discursive authority	44
3.2.2 Performing "truth" in journalism through objectivity	48
3.3 Forms of memory in journalism: Research perspectives and gaps	54
3.3.1 Temporal (dis-)connections: From commemorations to analogies	55
3.3.2 Witnessing traumatic pasts in and through journalism	60
3.4 Chapter summary: Journalism's memory production between past and present	64
4 Journalism and silence: The "Other" side of memory	67
4.1 Connections between journalism, memory and postcolonial studies	68
4.2 Silence and journalism's representation of the past	69
4.2.1 Strategies of re(-)presentation: Speaking for and about colonial subjects	70
4.2.2 Silence, forgetting and aphasia	73
4.3 Cultural citizen- and subjectship through journalistic memory production	78
4.3.1 Drawing the boundaries of belonging in journalism	78
4.3.2 Citizen- and subjectship in African media contexts	81
4.4 Never forget? Constructing the Herero and Nama genocide in journalism	87
4.5 Chapter summary and questions for analysis	92

5	Methodology and research design	95
5.1	Critical discourse analysis for analyzing post-colonial silence	95
5.1.1	CDA and critical self-reflection in communication studies	95
5.1.2	Analytical steps	100
5.2	Material selection, collection and availability	103
5.2.1	Selection criteria and time frame of analysis	103
5.2.2	German material: Daily newspapers and news magazine	105
5.2.3	Namibian material: Daily newspapers and broadcaster	108
5.2.4	Background conversations with Namibian journalists	114
5.3	Reflections on the research process	116
6	Formal analysis: The Herero and Nama genocide in German and Namibian journalism	119
6.1	Namibian journalism: Genocide in the news	119
6.1.1	Occasions for reporting and discursive events	121
6.1.2	Rubrics of coverage	123
6.1.3	Discursive positions	126
6.1.4	Discursive strands of reporting	133
6.2	German journalism: Genocide between cultural reviews and foreign politics	135
6.2.1	Occasions for reporting and discursive events	136
6.2.2	Rubrics of coverage	138
6.2.3	Discursive positions	140
6.2.4	Discursive strands of reporting	145
6.3	Chapter summary and selection of typical examples	148
7	Terms of genocide: Re-presenting the colonial past in journalism	151
7.1	"As it was called back then": Describing colonial genocide in German and Namibian journalism	152
7.1.1	"Our place in the sun": Remediations of colonial source material	152
7.1.2	Personalizing genocidal violence in journalism	157
7.1.3	Excursus: Journalism's use of colonial photographs	169
7.2	"The first freedom fighters": Connecting the genocide to the liberation struggle	170
7.3	"Europe's dark side": Connecting the genocide to European colonialism	179
7.4	"Imperial Germany's Third Reich": Connecting to the Holocaust in German and Namibian journalism	187
7.4.1	Describing, addressing and temporally limiting German perpetrators	188
7.4.2	Holocaust reparations as a template for the present	192
7.5	Preliminary conclusion: Memory production through/despite colonial sources in journalism	197
8	Whose past, whose present? Representation through temporal (dis-)connection in journalism	201
8.1	"Herero customs": Commemorative coverage in journalism	202
8.1.1	"An unusual sight": Herero and Nama traditions in German foreign reporting	202
8.1.2	Between tradition and modernity: Calls for development in journalism	207
8.2	"I will not stop fighting": Temporal continuity as a threat	212

8.2.1	“No option but to become their own liberators”: Herero and Nama demands in the present	212
8.2.2	“The ‘sentimental values’ of some individuals”: The economic limits of the past	222
8.3	“Hardly secret Bismarck admirers”: Positioning German speakership against the past	227
8.3.1	German-speaking academics: Knowing the past, speaking in the present	227
8.3.2	“German MPs fight for genocide victims”: Mapping political positions onto (a lack of) knowledge	236
8.3.3	“Restitution as an opportunity” – for whom?	242
8.4	Preliminary conclusion: Recognizing the past in the present	248
9	Conclusion, discussion and outlook: Memories of colonial genocide in journalism	253
10	References	267
	List of tables	287
	List of figures	289
	Appendix	291
A:	List of articles for in-depth analysis	291
B:	MAXQDA code system	300

